Today

Eleven More Days.
T. R. Would Be 74.
Also the Forgotten Lady.
A Really Big Shovel.

—By Arthur Brisbane—

ONLY ELEVEN DAYS more before election and then you will know all about it. Many know now, but certainty is better than prophecy. The last 11 days will be hard-working days for the candidates.

Mr. Hoover will speak in more than 20 different cities, and Governor Roosevelt will continue his campaign without rest. Talking to 120,000,000 people is not easy, even with newspapers to help.

While we carry on our quadrennial housekeeping, struggling with our depression, two thousand in a "hunger army" are worrying the police in London, singing "The Red Flag," carrying red flags in their hands. London police use no firearms, even under severest provocation. Experience has taught them that killing is dangerous.

Yesterday, a double anniversary, was Navy Day, 157th anniversary of the founding of the United States Navy. It was also the birthday of the late President Theodore Roosevelt, who was a good worker for the navy of the United States.

Had he lived until now, Theodore Roosevelt would be 74 years old. If he could return and find a Roosevelt running for President, that would not surprise him. But the discovery that the candidate was not his son WOULD surprise him.

Governor Roosevelt presented "The Forgotten Man" to the attention of the public. Now Elizabeth Tilton, head of a women's committee for education against alcohol, "summons a convention of forgotten women of the 1932 election." A big crowd would be there, if all the forgotten women were present.

Your forgotten man is a rarity compared with the number of women forgotten between breakfast and dinner.

When it is necessary for florists to write notes reminding husbands of their wedding day or their wife's birthday you realize how many forgotten women there are.

Machinery that makes manual labor less and less necessary is our big problem now. It is also the hope of the real civilization, which will come eventually.

Machinery will be a problem for a little while, then a great blessing, and meanwhile you admire the mechanical marvels that will some day set men free from physical slavery.

How many thousands of men, working painfully with pick and shovel, will this giant shovel replace? Operated by electricity, it lifts up 54,000 pounds of earth at every bite, and the operator, with his shovel at the end of a long arm, can drop the earth 200 feet from the shovel, and on top of a seven-story building if desired.

This giant shovel will be used to strip the earth, 70 feet deep, from the top of a rich coal field, laying bare the coal, which will also be scooped up, steam shovels doing away with painful mining underground.

Copper, the metal, is an empire in itself. The electrical industry rests on copper, which does not disappear in rust like iron. You may dig up copper pipes in good condition that were put underground in the island of Crete before Daedalus flew to safety from the labyrinth.

Copper, like everything else, sells too cheap, and the emperors of copper will meet in New York soon to see what can be done about making prices better.

The mysterious word, "Katanga," originating in Africa, is most powerful in the copper empire. Britishers were wise when they gathered in those great South African properties that now give them the greatest gold, diamond and copper mines.

Duke Visconti, mayor of Milan, Italy, will today present five comfortable houses to five families in Milan with the largest number of children.

Mussolini set the example in Rome.

In this "more highly civilized" country, the arrival of a great many children is frequently followed by the arrival of a "dispossess" agent. Hence the growth of the birth control movement.

Dr. Rosenow, who works with the Mayo Brothers, announces the discovery that different germs act differently in an electro-magnetic field.

Putting germs between the positive and negative poles of a magnet makes it possible to distinguish one from another of the various streptococci, looking much alike, that are found in cases of colds, sore throat, influenza and infantile paralysis. Electric tests show which germ is which, and should help to prevent epidemics.

The electric unit, whatever it may be, but certainly infinitely "smaller" than the smallest germ, may ultimately win man's fight against his most deadly enemy, the INVISIBLE enemy.

15,000 ROAR "AL" WELCOME AT WORCESTER

DUMB, BUT NOT THE RIGHT WAY

William Canary of Detroit made money, not by singing for his supper, but by saying he couldn't sing at all.

He claimed to be deaf and dumb, but he wasn't deaf at all, and only dumb enough to pick a police inspector who knew the sign language.

Canary approached Police Inspectors John Holmes and Frank O'Connell in Causeway st. with a card begging for help and saying that he was deaf and dumb. Inspector O'Connell, who knows sign language, began to talk to him. There was no reply. Then Inspector Holmes stepped on his foot and it was revealed that Williams was far from dumb.

He was arrested on charges of vagrancy and panhandling. He talked in real language to Judge Devlin. William will be a Canary in the gilded cage of the State Farm hereafter.

Robert Goodman, a doctor, whose operations in connection with a collection agency racket were recently exposed by the Boston American were found guilty of larceny in municipal court today. The Goodman brothers were alleged to have fraudulently obtained $100 from Hary Lofchie, a Boston truckman as a bond for a job thehy said they wanted done.

They are also under indictment on charges of fraudulently obtaining chattel mortgages through a collection agency they operated.

Al Comes Home and Sits Down With the Family

He took off his coat and he sat down with his foster family at the hearth of his adoption. There was a fire in the hearth and there was a friendly warmth and glow. He was, as he said, at home.

There was nothing of pretense about him. He was frank and above-board, talking to his own, not afraid to mention bigotry, not afraid to give Boston a glimpse of his own disappointment which has not left him bitter.

COHEN BARES LEADER OF GANGDOM

Lays Killings, Bootlegging, Hijacking, Drug and White Slave Activities to Night Life Figure

Revelations made to Dist.-Atty. Foley by Maurice Cohen, one of the alleged kidnapers of Herman Rutstein, named a promnient figure in Boston's night club life as the leader of organized crime in this section, it was learned late today.

Cohen's disclosures, according to the authorities, centered largely about this individual whose name repeatedly cropped up in the alleged kidnaper's recital, which ran the whole gamut of crime—bootlegging, kidnaping, white slavery, drug peddling, robbery and killing.

This individual was listed by Cohen as the boss of the whole seven "untouchables" whom he named—the men who [illegible] not be kidnaped or harassed by parasite gangs in any way—and he was named as the guiding hand in supplying help of every kind to criminals in trouble, provided they were regularly associated with organized crime.

$25,000 PRICE ON COHEN

Police today, according to Dist. Atty. Foley, were checking up on features of Cohen's story which had to do with men marked for kidnapings and not yet "taken."

Meanwhile Cohen was held in Dedham jail to keep him separate from the four others in the kidnaping plot held in Charles st. jail. A price of $25,000 has been put by gangdom on Cohen's life, according to reports reaching the courthouse.

Just what to do about Cohen's revelations remained a puzzle to the police who for several years have known the ringleaders of crime in this section without being able to pin anything vital on them.

The most startling part of Cohen's story was his account of the operations of a "mopping up" gang of criminals, a so-called protective association, which engineered the killings of those who had violated the perverted code of the underworld.

LINKED WITH PILLBOX

It was revealed today among other things that Cohen linked the biggest figure in Boston's crime directly with the Woburn pillbox, the most elaborately equipped alcohol plant ever seized by federal agents.

He told the whole story of the alcohol trade, in which he said he was a figure until he was hijacked for an $80,000 cargo, which ruined him financially. He named a Brockton man as the one responsible for his ruination.

Another feature of his story was his account of the white slave trade, a description of the "circuit" around which girls are shipped and the means of obtaining protection for this nefarious racket.

HOTEL IS HANGOUT

An old hotel in the South End is the hangout for gangsters coming in and from out of town for all sorts of crime, according to the revelations, and teh authorities say the ownership of this place can be traced to the man whose name figures so prominently in the story of the alleged kidnaper of Rutstein.

Copies of Cohen's story as taken down by a stenographer in the office of Dist. Atyt. Foley have been sent to Police Commissioner Mulrooney in New York because the story covers the whole East, shwing the interlocking of organized crime in all the large cities.

BOYS BLAME 'FAGIN' IN 11 ROBBERIES

One Suspect Is Held After the Gang's Series of Daring Breaks in Six Cities

The youths engaged in the series of burglaries are believed to be of the same gang to which Charles Marino, 16, Chelsea high school foot ball player, who was shot dead in a Medford spa holdup three weeks ago, also belonged.

Following a chase after one of the burglaries, in which a store window had been shattered in Chelsea, police picked up [illegible], alias Robert Rosetti, 18, of Second st., East Everett, who had a cut hand.

Rosetti, who admitted he "hangs around" Cook's Corner in Chelsea, where young Marino's stamping ground was at night, was arraigned in Chelsea court on charges of larceny and breaking and entering in the night time. He was held in $10,000 for a hearing Nov. 3.

CHECK UP ON LOSSES

No estimate has yet been made of the amount of goods and money obtained by the bandits in their rapid tour through Stoneham, Wakefield, Medford, Malden, Everett and Chelsea.

Managers of the various stores which were entered were checking stock to determine their losses.

First information regarding the robberies came to police from Mrs. Martha Uhl of Woodlawn st., Chelsea.

She was aroused early today by the noise of the mature burglar and his youthful accomplices as they broke into a chain store opposite her home. It was this same store to which the gang returned a short time later and were pursued by police.

Mrs. Uhl told police that while

DOG TERRORIZES 400; IS HANGED

Nearly 400 school children were terrorized and several were bowled over today in East Boston when a big German police dog ran wild, leaping on girls and boys.

Girls screamed and boys ran as the dog jumped upon first one and then another, felling them.

Telephone calls brought Patrolman Martin Connolly and Motorcycle Officer Joseph Gavin in the patrol wagon. They chased the dog into a yard and slammed the gate.

They were about to shoot the dog when they became fearful the shots might go wild and injure some of the children.

A rope was taken from the patrol wagon and Connolly lassoed the dog, then strung him up on a tree, where he strangled.

The body was then taken to the city yard at Lexington and West Eagle sts., and thrown into the harbor. The owner could not be found. The animal wore no collar.

He sits there, this afternoon, westbound from the scene of his triumphs, the acclaim of the multitudes who adore him still resounding.

He is not merely the Happy Warrior.

Fresh laurels have been bestowed upon him. He is to Boston now, in its deep-rooted affection, "the great sport of American politics."

Twenty thousand people had heard him in the Arena. They clung to his every word. They clung to the rafters.

They heard him, in the plain, simple terms he employs so effectively, caution them not to impale his friend "Frank" upon the shafts of intolerance of which he, himself, was a target four years ago.

Party leaders were jubilant over the probable effect of Al's heart-stirring appeal. State Chairman Maynard predicted a Democratic victory in Massachusetts, heretofore admitted to have a Hoover leaning, by at least 50,000.

HOOVER ON WAY TO INDIANA PREACHES HIGH TARIFF

PRESIDENT MAY SPEAK UPON BEER PROPOSAL TONIGHT

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
International News Service Staff Correspondent

With President Hoover to Indianapolis, Oct. 28 (INS)—President Hoover traveled through the industrial valley of the Ohio river today preaching high tariff and asserting that but for its protection "your industries would not be merely depressed, they would be utterly destroyed."

The Democrats, he charged, propose to tear down this protection.

"Their candidate for President," he asserted, "constantly repeats his demand for repeal of what he calls this exhorbitant tariff. My own position is clear. I am squarely for a protective tariff."

The voters he added, must choose between these policies in November.

CROWDS OUT EARLY

Mr. Hoover inaugurated his fourth invasion of the Middle West at Parkersburg, W. Va., early this morning. There was a crowd of several thousand to greet him there, despite the early hour and the winterish air.

"I am deeply gratified by this generous reception here in the heart of the Ohio valley," the President said. "I thank you for your welcome. In the few moments at my disposal I cannot touch upon more than one of the vital issues of this campaign.

"In your city of diversified interests, your progress depends upon your industrial plants. They have been hard hit by this depression.

"Only a few days ago a delegation from one of your principal industries called upon me in Washington to describe the situation as you feel it here, with employment reduced to only two and one-half days a week. These gentlemen represented both employers and workers.

"I would point out to you that this situation illustrated perfectly the imperative need of the protection afforded by the protective tariff.

"For example, pottery and porcelain industries suffer from the competition of Japanese skilled workers who are paid a wage that at best dooms them to a standard of living lower than any unskilled day laborer in America would tolerate.

"If it were not for the protective wall of the tariff, your industries would not be merely depressed, they would be utterly destroyed. Instead of 2½ days a week to work your artisans would be without any hope.

"Yet our Democratic opponents propose to tear down this protection. I am determined that they shall not do it. Your votes on November 8 will help to determine which of these policies shall be adopted. I am confident you will support the Republican party pledged to the protective tariff."

In Athens, O., Mr. Hoover was greeted by another large throng. There was a band out and an American Legion delegation. There were many students in the throng, a fact which the President commented upon.

Tonight, in Indianapolis, he will deliver another major speech of his campaign for re-election.

MAY TALK ON BEER

It was reported aboard the Hoover special today—but unconfirmed—that the President might have something new to say at Indianapolis tonight about beer.

It is a sore subject with the Republicans, as well as an embarrassing one, particularly since Governor Franklin D. Roosevelt and Al Smith have been emphasizing in their recent speeches that a Democratic administration means the early restoration of beer and a consequent reduction in other forms of taxation.

LONG SILENT ON ISSUE

Mr. Hoover has not mentioned prohibition in any of his speeches since the night of August 11, when he formally accepted renomination. At that time he merely expressed the opinion that "a change is necessary" in the prohibition laws, and let it go at that.

He proposed no alternative, merely stating that American statesmanship was capable of working out a solution of the problem.

All three of the states through which Mr. Hoover traveled today, while normally Republican in national elections, have been revealed in the straw votes and newspaper polls to have distinct Democratic leanings.

In 1928 he carried West Virginia by 112,000, Ohio by nearly 750,000, and Indiana by almost 300,000.

RITCHIE THERE ALSO

Mr. Hoover will have to share the political spotlight tonight with one of his severest Democratic critics, Governor Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland. While the President is speaking at the university, Governor Ritchie will be addressing a great Democratic rally in Cadle Tabernacle.

NEW ENGLAND TURNING TO ROOSEVELT

Candidate Is Urged to Extend His Campaign in This Section

Albany, Oct. 28 (US)—Governor Roosevelt was deluged today with requests from local Democratic leaders to broaden his forthcoming invasion of New England.

Although his campaign got off to an uncertain start in that area, particularly in Massachusetts and Rhode Island, it is asserted the tide is now turning strongly to the Democratic ticket.

Leaving here Saturday for a week-end at Groton, Mass., where two of his sons attended school, Roosevelt will make stops in the western end of the state, which is normally Republican. He speaks in Boston, Monday night, and may also speak at Portland and Providence before returning.

Roosevelt today will start drafting speeches for the remainder of his campaign with the aid of Professor Raymond Moley of Columbia and Senators Pittman of Nevada and Byrnes of North Carolina.

Prediction of "a glorious victory" was voiced by Gov. Roosevelt in a radio speech last night.

He spoke from his private study in the executive mansion, sending a special message to the testimonial dinner tendered in his honor at Hotel Astor in New York City by the stage and screen division of the Democratic national committee.

Roosevelt paid tribute to the work being done in behalf of the Democratic campaign and by the members of the stage and screen division. He added:

"I envy you down there tonight. How I wish I could hear Eddie Dowling sing, 'Row, row row with Roosevelt.' But I've sent my mother to the dinner—I know she's enjoying herself and that she'll tell me all about it tomorrow.

Keep up this great work of yours for the glorious and smashing Democratic victory toward which we are headed."

3-STATE TOUR FOR ROOSEVELT

Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt may answer the urgent plea of New Hampshire and Maine Democrats and visit both states on his four-day trip here, it was announced at Democratic state headquarters today.

Democrats along the North Shore have asked that Roosevelt, who will attend a rally under the auspices of the Essex County Democratic Club on Monday

AL WINS STATE FOR HIS PARTY, SAY LEADERS

Arena Address Assures Democratic Sweep in Massachusetts, They Declare

Alfred E. Smith by his sincere and wholehearted appeal for Roosevelt and Garner, as well as for Gov. Ely and the state ticket at the Arena last night, assured a Democratic sweep in Massachusetts on November 8, Democratic leaders declared today.

They asserted that he removed all doubt that his thousands and thousands of followers here would vote for the party's national ticket, and they were unstinted in their praise for his assistance.

Senator David I. Walsh told the Boston Evening American:

"Al Smith's speech last night at the Boston Arena has undoubtedly removed the last vestige of doubt concerning the hesitancy on the part of Massachusetts Democrats to support Roosevelt and Garner."

50,000 VICTORY SEEN

Chairman Joseph A. Maynard of the Democratic State Committee said:

"Al Smith's speech last night means that 98 per cent of the Smith followers who were lukewarm in their support of Roosevelt and Garner are now on the line for the Democratic ticket, and his speech means that Massachusetts will go Democratic by at least 50,000 votes.

"Al Smith did as perfect a job as any man could possibly do. He has proven a tremendous help to the Roosevelt-Garner ticket.

"I regard as the highlight of his speech his truly noble plea that all his friends forget the wrongs, real or fancied, done to him and to support the party candidates."

"HE'S WON STATE," CURLEY

Mayor Curley said:

"The presence her and powerful presentation made by Gov. Smith will unquestionably prove the determining factor upon election day and leave no doubt in the mind of any individual familiar with conditions politically as to the outcome.

"Massachusetts can now be safely recorded as Democratic upon Nov. 8."

Former Mayor John F. Fitzgerald said:

"Smith's speech will always be regarded as the effective agent in bringing together the Democrats and the independents. He is idolized by Massachusetts voters, and his speech at the Arena assured a united Democracy in Massachusetts."

From all corners of Massachusetts and New England, as well as from the country at large, telegrams and telephone messages to Smith's suite at the Copley-Plaza hotel declared that he had done the Democratic party incalculable benefit by his Boston address, and had assured victory.

BOSTON 100 P. C. TO AL

walking marathon." It tickled the police and the crowd.

"BEER IN DECEMBER"

"Just like Al to pull a stunt like this," said a ruddy traffic cop. "Here's a man who missed the President's chair by a hair and who could have won this time if nominated, strolling, puffing a cigar, just like an ordinary fellow! How many would do it? Shows his democracy."

"In December, my boy," came the snappy rejoinder and the crowd laughed and applauded.

Throughout the novel stroll the "Happy Warrior" was given an ovation. Swarms of girl clerks in the various windows of the John Hancock building cheered him as he and his impromptu sidewalk parade passed down Stuart st.

Truck drivers and taxi drivers hailed him and to each he replied with a friendly salute and a cheery "hello."

AL "UNDER ARREST"

The "Super" was in such a hurry to greet his old friend that he rushed from headquarters without his hat or topcoat, which a patrolman carried in his wake and urged him to put on.

"I wanted a word last night," said Supt. Crowley, removing his iron hat as he warmly grasped Smith's hand.

"Hello, Superintendent," said Smith. "Glad to see you.".

Linking the "Super's arm in his he stood erect and said to a battery of camera men:

"The correct title for this one is, 'Under Arrest.'"

SHAKES GIRLS' MANDS

Two pretty girls broke through the crowd and asked Al if he would kindly give them his autograph. They were Miss Ethel Padden of 44 Moore st., Winthrop, and her chum, Helen Gibbs.

"And now won't you shake our hands," implored Miss Padden blushing, which invitation was promptly met. A young man was lucky enough to get the third autograph during the "marathon."

ELY JOINS HIM

Mayor Hague of Jersey City posed with Mrs. Smith on the observation platform and when Al joined the group shouted to the crowd:

"Of course Al had to come along and spoil it."

"Here's another regular fellow you fellows must film," said Mayor Hague, forcing Governor Ely into the circle and the crowd gave the Governor a cheer.

The "Happy Warrior" rose at 9, refreshed and buoyant. He looked in the pink of condition. He and his son went to the hotel barber shop and later Al conferred with social and political friends in his suite.

When the cameramen began their attack this morning for new poses of him and Mrs. Smith, Al remarked good-naturedly:

"You fellows are as thick and busy as flies! Don't you see I'm just a private citizen and need a few moments' breathing spell? Come around in half an hour and you can fire to your hearts' content."

Gov. Ely, who accompanied Smith on the train, spoke briefly to the crowd at the station, explaining that Smith's physician forbade him to make outdoor addresses. When Ely mentioned the big turnout last night to "see and cheer Al," the latter interrupted, saying:

"Yes, and they came to see and hear you, too."

HOW MIGHT HAS FALLEN

VICTORY SURE, EXPERTS SAY

Aboard Smith Car, En Route to Albany, Oct. 28 (AP)—While the crowds cheered the passage of Alfred E. Smith's private car through Massachusetts today, friends of the former New York governor traveling with him predicted he had definitely assured a Roosevelt-Garner victory in the Bay State by his Boston speech last night.

Mayor Frank Hague of Jersey City, who was Smith's floor leader in the Chicago convention, said:

"Everyone of political importance I spoke to now concedes that Massachusetts is safe for Governor Roosevelt and that Governor Ely will be re-elected by a very large majority.

Gov. Ely, who traveled across the state with Smith, after addressing a crowd at Framingham, which extended nearly a city block down the railroad right of way, declared:

"The frankness of Gov. Smith's Boston speech was convincing. There should never be any doubt now about a united Democratic party in Massachusetts behind the national ticket."

At Newtonville Ely, Hague and Smith appeared together on the observation platform, and the former New York Governor waved his brown derby to a throng that hurdled fences to get close to the car.

At Wellesley, although the train made no stop, a number of college girls waved a greeting to Smith, and caught a glimpse of him as he smiled from a car window.

At Framingham, Governor Ely told the cheering throng that Smith, because of doctor's orders, could not speak in the open air.

"But you know where he stands."

Hoover Takes to the Pullmans

—By ARTHUR "BUGS" BAER—

But the owl climbs down out of the tree today and will make 22 speeches by Monday night.

Eighteen of them will be five-minute wayside solos for the benefit of baggage-masters at small depots.

These short, sharp bursts of selling talks have already been endorsed by the vendors of combination rapid noodle choppers and corn removers.

If you have never spoken from the back of a wagon you cannot visualize the splendor and dignity of a rear-end Pullman Shillaber.

You are for country, home and the flag with one hand on your heart and the other on the bellrope.

And such a trip is a continuous round of whistle endorsement and airbrake applause. Nothing can go wrong when you make your speech at a water tank and your encore 17 miles further up the tracks.

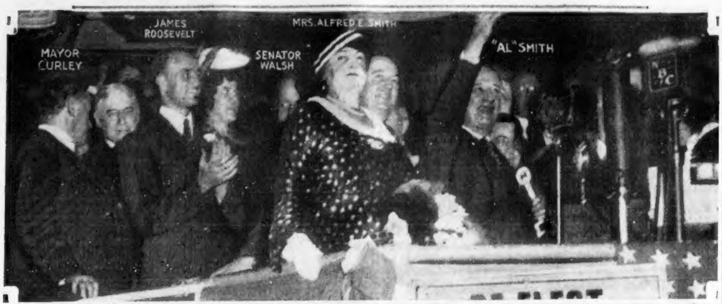
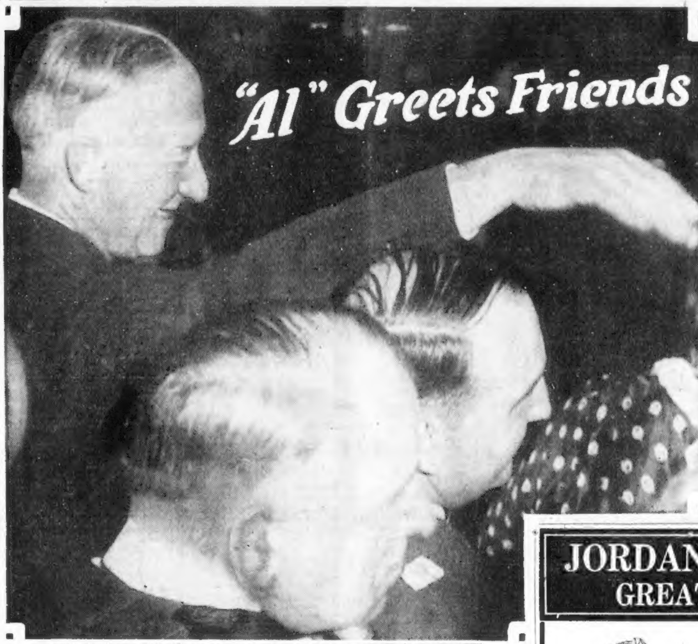
CAN THAT! CAN THAT!

This action shot of "The Happy Warrior" was snapped as he was admonishing part of the throng that crowded the Arena for booing the mention of the name of a favorite son of the Bay State, Calvin Coolidge. Al's "Can that! Can that! I'm talking about successful men, now," stopped the booing.





"AL" WAFTS "HELLO, THERE," TO FRIENDS ON FLOOR

The picture at top shows leaders in a united Democratic party, headed by former Governor Smith, with the key to the city of Boston in his hand, and including Mayor James M. Curley, Senator David I. Walsh, James Roosevelt, son of the Democratic nominee for the presidency, and Mrs. Smith, as they smiled on the cheering thousands that gave Al Smith such a reception as warmed him to the bottom of his heart. The bottom picture shows the former candidate of the party as he leaned over the heads of Senator Walsh and others on the speakers' platform to wave a smiling greeting to friends he spotted in the huge audience.

THERE'S THE IDAHO POTATO

Lowell Gas $950,000 Bond Issue O. K.'d

With two members dissenting, the State Board of Public Utilities today approved the issue of $950,000 mortgage bonds by the Lowell Gas Light Company.

Emporia, Kas., Oct. 28 (AP)—Commenting on the gibes poked at him by Alfred E. Smith in his Boston speech last night, William Allen White, Emporia editor and author and a Hoover supporter, said today:

STUDENT GIVES GANG RIDE TIP

A gang kidnaping—perhaps murder—was revealed to police today by Samuel Orton, Harvard student, who supplied clues which may lead to arrests.

Orton was driving past Norumbega park, early today, when he saw two autos side by side, one with Massachusetts plates and the other a New York machine.

Orton took the numbers of both machines and notified police.

The Massachusetts car, which carried the victim, was found to be registered to a Fall River bootlegger.

Search at his place revealed that the car had been returned there with bloodstains on the cushions and one window broken. The owner could not be located.

Copyright, 1932, International News Service

Bucharest, Rumania, Oct. 28 (INS)—The dramatic duel of the past week between King Carol and his divorced queen, now the Princess Helen, was brought to a climax today.

Helen not only insisted that she remain in Bucharest and assume full control of the education of their son, the 11-year-old Crown Prince Michael, but also demanded $110,000 annually, a sum equal to more than two-thirds of the entire Rumanian civil list.

Of the $110,000, Helen asked $50,000 for herself and $60,000 for Prince Michael.

Carol, although refusing to turn his son's share over to Helen, agreed to pay his former queen the $50,000 annually she asked.

The cabinet was scheduled to meet today to decide for or against Helen. The meeting will follow two days of conversations at the royal palace at Sinaia between Carol, Premier Juliu Maniu, friend of Helen's, and Nicholas Titulescu, former premier, close to Carol but violently opposed to Helen's return.

Titulescu favored depriving Helen of her title as a Rumanian princess on the ground that a divorced woman is no longer entitled to bear the title of her husband.

Carol, however, wanted Helen to retain the title of "majesty" for "the sake of Michael," although at the same time he opposed all her financial demands in behalf of the young prince on the ground that Michael was "the child of the nation."

It was rumored that Helen was supporting Greek monarchists and because of this was presenting the great financial demands.

Philadelphia, Oct. 28 (AP)—Norman Thomas, Socialist candidate for PPresident, today was not molested by police when he spoke in Reyburn Plaza where President Hoover is to speak Monday on his way from Washington to New York.

"Now pupils," he said, "let us get together and have an understanding. Iam not making a political speech here aed I presume that President Hoover when he comes here will not make a political speech. When Hoover comes here he sure to keep order, because he has been known to call out the army, as he did in Washington."

THREE HELD IN PLOT TO ROB GIRL

A new indictment was revealed today in the shooting at the home of Ralph E. Parker, Boston insurance broker, on Clyde rd., Watertown, last March, where his former secretary, Miss Blanche Fuller of Commonwealth ave., Allston, fired a revolver barrage.

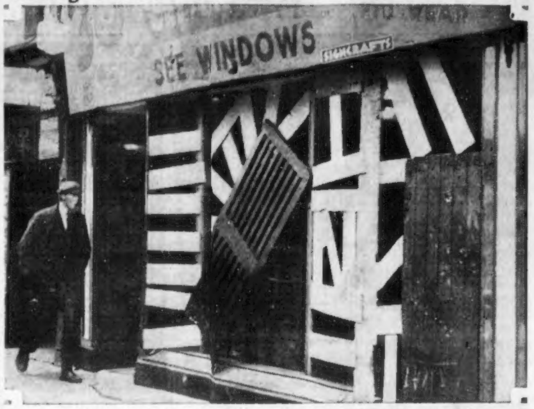
Parker, his wife, Alice, and Paul S. Mosser of Avalon rd., Woburn, also an insurance broker, appeared in Middlesex Superior Court and pleaded not guilty to an indictment charging conspiracy to steal from Miss Fuller.

They pleaded not guilty and Parker was released in $5000 bail, the others on their personal recognizance.

The government alleges Miss Fuller and Parker were intimate and that Parker told Miss Fuller his wife was going to sue her for alienation of affections. Parker allegedly advised Miss Fuller to settle, and she paid $750, signed an agreement to pay $500 more and then arranged to pay $10 a week until $5000 was paid.

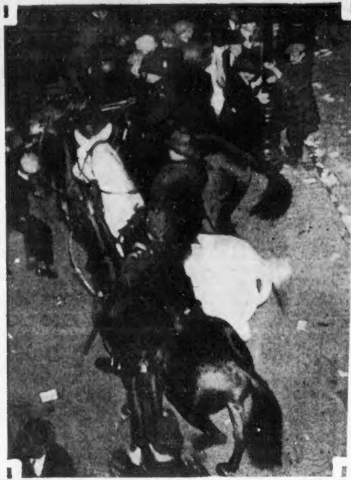
The Parkers were previously indicted, but it was disclosed today that indictment had been nol prossed in order that the new charge could be made, including that against Mosser.

Milling Mobs Subdued in Clash as London's Hunger Army Marches



ONE OF THE MANY LONDON STORES LOOTED DURING RIOTING

Big plate glass windows were shattered and the contents of the stores seized during the riots as the above photo shows. Boarded up fronts of the business establishments give an idea of the fierceness of the outbreak. Many of the demonstrators and police were injured by flying sticks and stones and clubs wielded by the London Bobbys.



RIOTERS RIDDEN DOWN

Part of the huge crowd of hunger marchers being driven back during the London rioting a week ago when the huge crowd of unemployed tried to stage a demonstration in St. George's sq. Troops were finally called to subdue the agitators.

Norman's House Guarded After Hunger Rioting

London, Oct. 28—Placing the official casualties of the Hyde Park unemployment riot at 19 police and 58 demonstrators injured, Sir John Gilmour, secretary of state for home affairs, told the House of Commons today that the demonstrators carried weapons "by deliberate intent."

Sir John, answering the request of George Lansbury, labor leader, for official information on the riot, said two of the policemen were still in the hospital with serious injuries.

He revealed the demonstrators hurled iron bolts at the police, who found 154 sticks hidden in a truck, some of them studded with nails.

"The presence of such weapons," he said, "could only be by deliberate intent."

The 12 arrested were arraigned today while heavy cordons of police maintained guard both inside and outside the court buildings. The violators were either fined or reprimanded.

WILD RIOT SCENES

Yesterday's battle was between several thousand police and thousands of unemployed, who ostensibly were fighting under a red flag that bore the hammer and sickle of Communism.

The signal for warfare was a brick heaved through a postoffice window near the park, just as 2000 hungry marchers from all parts of the island marched wearily into the park.

The policeman nearest the brick heaver swung a club and the riot was on. Police charged again and again, each charge provoking a barrage of stones and mud.

Trees and railings in the park were mutilated by the mob in its desperate effort to gain the upper hand, but the police prevailed and slowly cleared the area.

GUARD NORMAN'S HOUSE

A non-uniformed guard last night patrolled the neighborhood of the home of Montagu Norman, governor of the Bank of England. An anonymous telephone call said a party of unemployed would attack his residence. The call was regarded as a hoax, but, nevertheless, the police set up a guard.

Nothing happened until the arrival of three taxis filled with young men attired mostly in evening clothes. All of them were very merry, shouting:

"We want to see Prof. Skinner."

The police shooed them away. (Prof. Skinner was the name under which Mr. Norman visited the United States recently.)

Urges His Employes to Vote as They Feel

Detroit, Oct. 28 (AP)—A note by Frederic B. Stevens, foundry operator, to employes of his organization today urged them to "vote solely as their conscience dictated" at the November election.

"It makes no difference to you how I vote, and it makes no difference to me how you vote," said the note, which was placed in pay envelopes. "Coercion has no place in American politics. No man has a right to interfere in your politics, any more than he has a right to interfere in your family affairs or your religious belief."

8 TEAMS LEFT IN VANDERBILT TOURNEY

New York, Oct. 28 (US)—Eight teams had successfully vanquished their opponents in the second round of the Vanderbilt Cup contract bridge tournament today.

In a bitter neck-and-neck battle that lasted until 3 a. m., the team of Phil Hal Sims, Willard Karn, Waldemar Von Zedwitz and Harold S. Vanderbilt, donor of the cup, defeated Bernard H. Cone, Philip E. Farley, Stewart W. Bowers and Alphonse Moyse, Jr., by a score of 5015.

EIGHT WINNERS

The eight winners, who are grouped as they will play in the quarter-finals tonight, are:

David Burnstine, Howard Schenken, Richard Frey, Charles Lochridge and A. I. Leventhal, J. A. Goodman, H. J. Dailey, Charles Vogelhofer, Ely Culbertson, Oswald Jacoby, Theodore Lightner, Michael Gottlieb, and Gratz Scott, Edwin Wetzlar, Ralph Liebenderfer, Raymond Balfe.

Mrs. Culbertson is the only woman left in the tournament.

One of the biggest swings of the second round came on board 423, which netted the Burnstine-Schenken-Frey-Lochridge combination 3370 points—1370 when the team played North and South, and 2000 when the team played East and West. Both sides were vulnerable. South dealt.

The hand:

NORTH
H—10, 8.
D—A, K, Q, 6, 3.
C—K, Q, 4, 2.

WEST
S—K, 10.
H—J, 4, 3.
D—8, 4, 2.
C—J, 10, 6, 5. E.

EAST
S—9, 7, 5.
H—A, K, Q, 9, 7; 6, 5, 2.
D—None.
C—9, 8.

SOUTH (DEALER)
S—A, J, 8, 4, 3, 2.
H—None.
D—J, 10, 9, 7, 5.
C—A, 7.

The Burnstine team played against Louis Osborne, Hugh McElroy, Mrs. Harris and Mrs. Osborne, whom they eliminated from the tournament by a score of 7210 points.

With Burnstine and Schenken playing North and South, dealer opened with one spade. An ultimate declaration of six diamonds was reached. The small slam was easily made for a plus of 1370.

SPECTACULAR PLAY

With Osborne and McElroy North and South against Lochridge and Frey East and West, the bidding and results were spectacular.

South and West passed, North bid a diamond and East four hearts. South then made the daring bid of seven diamonds, and West and North passed. East bid seven in hearts, willing to take a set to prevent what looked to him a certain vulnerable grand slam for his opponents. South then bid seven spades, which was doubled and redoubled.

The hand was set three tricks for a loss of 2000 points.

Robbery Reported After 15 Hours

Fifteen hours after, he claimed, he had been beaten and robbed by two men who entered his apartment, Reginald J. Graves, 39, a Belmont druggist, reported to Brighton police with his complaint.

Graves, who lives in Commonwealth ave., Brighton, stated that the two men had knocked him down with blackjacks and robbed him of $25 and papers in his billfold.

Bank 'Holdup' Is Only Police in Robber Hunt

Calm and peaceful banking was interrupted excitingly in the Boston Five Cents Savings Bank in School st., today when startled bank workers looked up to see half a dozen police, with drawn revolvers, rush into the bank, skid to a stop—and then gaze about a bit sheepishly.

"Robbers?" murmured the officers.

"No robbers!" retorted the bankers.

"Our error," said the officers, putting their revolvers back in the leashes and stalking out, taking a crowd of more than 100 curious with them.

A defective burglar alarm connected with the Milk st. police station had sounded the bank alarm in the station. The patrol wagon, racing to the bank, picked up five officers en route.

Buy a Ticket in a Lottery Wontcha?

By GILBERT SELDES

Could I, by any chance, interest you in a couple of tickets for the George Washington Sweepstakes, guaranteed to be on the square by the government of the United States, the horses running at Pimlico next month, and 45 per cent of the proceeds of the whole thing to the winners; 1st prize no less than $150,000, 45 per cent to "some worthy public project" and only 10 per cent to clerical expenses? Of course, I'll put my name on your ticket and if you win I'll get a small prize, too; that's the way the Irish Sweepstakes are run. It'll be a swell race, too, with Ninety Grand and Man o' Phar and Asparagus . . . and the President's name on every ticket; here, take it and read for yourself. And listen, you ain't heard nothin' yet

The month after that there'll be another sweepstakes on the Atlanta races and in the spring there'll be one every week or so — on Belmont and for the opening of the new tracks in Milwaukee and Sauk Center and . . . Perhaps I am dreaming.

Gilbert Seldes

But am I, In Stuart Chase invigorating book. "The New Deal," he seriously suggests Federal gambling and says: "Laugh it off, by all means—but you may be buying tickets in the 1950 Million Dollar First Prize New Year's Lottery." Just as Mr. Chase was finishing his book he read W. E. Woodward's stimulating "Money for Tomorrow" and found that Mr. Woodward was making the same suggestion. And if these writers are too abstract for you to take seriously I give you Mr. Frank Henry, secretary of the Liberal League of America, who in turn gives you Frank A. Vanderlip, "advocating in the Saturday Evening Post of September 24 a national lottery system to provide Federal old age insurance." (I recall that piece.)

The Liberal League "will not concern itself with prohibition." It has better fish to fry. It wants all those laws repealed which make gambling a crime. It wants bigger and more open sweepstakes. It reminds us that "one of the early acts of the First Congress of the United States, in 1776, was to pass a national lottery law to raise money for public works." (Is that date right?) Washington and Jefferson were all for national lotteries. If I am not mistaken a good part of the buildings in the Harvard Yard were built from the proceeds of state gambling.

Answer These

And Mr. Henry sends a questionnaire which is clever. Because you may say No to question one: "Should horse-race betting be legalized in states where it is now prohibited?" But what about number three. "Do you favor church raffles and lotteries where the proceeds are solely for the benefit of the church?" And then there is an obvious Yes to number four, asking whether you'd like to have a tax on legalized gambling. But the really smart question is five: "Do you believe that speculation in stocks and food commodities is on the same level with horse-race betting?" As one who has seen bookies trying to dodge their bets, I still would be tempted to answer that gambling in foods is a cut lower than gambling on horses.

But I should temper my sympathy for the Liberal League with a warning. Chase and Woodward are on the inner track. If gambling is legalized in America the government will take the cream of the profit, not the gamblers. We are a moral nation and in spite of the depression we will remain one.

* * *

Let Them Resign

Mr. Harry Weinberger, who recently defended Eugene O'Neill against an absurd charge of plagiarism, now defends Governor Roosevelt from the charge that he will have to wait four months for Mr. Hoover to get out of the White House. Mr. Weinberger suggests that if, as Mellon says, it is important to have the same man in office in November and in March, Mr. Hoover can, with grace and ease, let Mr. Roosevelt in. "Let Hoover appoint him (Roosevelt) Secretary of State, making Stimson resign, and then let Hoover and Curtis resign and Roosevelt can begin to function immediately."

Mr. Weinberger was once a Farmer-Laborite and a powerful supporter of La Follette, so some people will think that in declaring for Roosevelt and the resignation of Hoover he has not lost all hope of the millennium. I do not think so myself. On form the proposal is excellent and I think Mr. Hoover is quite capable of stepping out, whether on account of irritation or disappointment or patriotism doesn't matter. The catch lies in another direction: Charles Curtis, our Vice-President, the almost-chieftain and the almost-chief. It would be necessary to have his resignation in hand before Mr. Hoover sent his in; for, otherwise, in the half moment after Mr. Hoover went out Mr. Curtis might slip in and be President for an hour or a week . . . and we can't invite fatalities like that.

Ex-Rector Callan Fined $110 in Drunken Auto Crash

Another chapter in the tempestuous career of the Rev. John J. Callan, former rector of St. Andrew's Episcopal Church, Wellesley, was written in Dedham District Court today.

The rector, whose marital difficulties have occupied the attention of the courts for the last two years, was found guilty of being drunk and of operating while under the influence. He was fined $110 on both counts.

There were only two witnesses at the trial, both against Callan. Patrolman James Cavanaugh told the court that on the night of Oct. 4 he saw an auto zig-zagging along Washington st., Wellesley.

He followed in another car, and overtook it just after Callan's car was in collision with one operated by Raymond White of Brookline. He said Callan was slumped behind the wheel, and that there was a strong odor of liquor from him.

White said he tried to avoid Callan's car, but failed. He corroborated the officer's testimony that Callan was obviously drunk. Callan offered no defense.

Callan, who was rector of St. Andrew's Church at the time, married Mary Hemenway, daughter of Augustus Hemenway of Clarendon st. and niece of Bishop William Lawrence, in February, 1924.

In June, 1931, Mrs. Callan won a divorce from the ex-rector on charges of cruelty and gross and confirmed habits of intoxication. She was awarded the custody of their three children, which led to further legal battles by the rector.

French Arms Plan to Aid Kellogg Pact

Paris, Oct. 28 (AP)—The new French plan for disarmament and security, said to involve strengthening the Kellogg-Briand pact by creating a more specific definition of an aggressor nation, was approved today by the Superior Council of National Defense after a four-hour session.

The newspaper Petit Parisien said the plan suggests a general consultative pact, including the United States, and a general convention for reduction of armaments.

BITTER BATTLE IN MOUNTAIN STATES

By COLE E. MORGAN
Universal Service Correspondent

Washington, Oct. 28 — Whoever gets the four doubtful states of the Rocky Mountain region must travel a rocky road to get them from now until election day.

It will be no easy path to victory for either President Hoover or Governor Roosevelt in Colorado, Idaho, Montana or Wyoming.

Not one of the four states will be won by as much as a 20,000 popular vote majority. In Wyoming and Colorado the majorities will be under 10,000 and nearer five than 10.

This is the outlook from a careful and detailed analysis by counties and Congressional districts of returns in the nation-wide presidential poll of the Boston Evening American, in co-operation with all the other Hearst morning, evening and Sunday papers in the United States.

The analysis gives Montana, Idaho and Wyoming to Roosevelt and Colorado to Hoover as the returns stand today.

Roosevelt's Montana majority figures 12,324. In Idaho it is 17,074 and in Wyoming 4914. Hoover's Colorado majority figures 6528.

These estimates are arrived at by applying the percentage division of the post card poll ballots to the total popular vote cast in the 1928 election.

In no instance are these figures so large that they could not be overturned with a last minute swing.

15,000 PARADE FOR MUSSOLINI

Rome, Oct. 28 (AP)—All Italy turned out today to celebrate the tenth anniversary of Premier Mussolini's Fascism.

Perhaps most important on today's program was the review of 15,000 disabled war veterans by the premier and 100 foreign and military naval attaches, four of them Americans.

The invitation to the foreign group to ride with Il Duce when he reviewed the parade set a new Fascist precedent. The Americans invited are Col. E. R. Warren McCabe, military attache; Capt. Macgillivray Milne, naval attache; Capt. Francis M. Brady, assistant military attache, and Lieut.-Commander Frederick W. Pennoyer, Jr., assistant naval attache.

The veterans' parade was arranged to inaugurate the new "Highway of the Hills," from Venezia sq., facing the premier's office, to the Coliseum.

Masked Bandit Robs Woman in Revere

A masked man who entered the home of Mrs. Charles Rizzo at 12 Fiske st., Revere, held her up and took her purse containing $20 was being sought by police in that city today.

Mrs. Rizzo told police that she was alone in the house shortly after midnight waiting for her husband to return home. She said she did not report the holdup until two hours after it occurred as she was afraid to leave the house alone.

Porto Ricans Laud Curley Relief Work

From Porto Rico, Mayor Curley received a message of appreciation for his efforts in sponsoring relief measures for aiding the victims of the recent hurricane which swept the island with serious loss.

The message was signed by Joseph C. Benet, Benjamin J. Horton and William Whittemore, as "militant Democratic residents of Puerto Rico."

Prison Strike Ended

Indiantown, Fla., Oct. 28 (AP)—Acceding to demands of prison officials, convicts at a state road camp near here, filed out of their barracks and returned to work today, ending a strike that kept the camp in turmoil for 24 hours.

How Nominees Stand In Nation-Wide Poll

Washington, Oct. 28—The tabulation that follows shows the total vote thus far recorded for President Hoover and Gov. Roosevelt in the nationwide Presidential poll of the Boston Evening American in cooperation with all other Hearst morning, evening and Sunday papers in the United States.

It also shows the majority each candidate has in each State in which he is leading

In addition, it gives the gain of each candidate on the latest returns received from each State, as compared with the last preceding report from the State. These State reports are usually a week apart.

The final feature of this table shows the net gain of each candidate in each State where he has improved his position, as compared with the last preceding report from that State.

Books---And a Number of Things

By CHARLES HANSON TOWNE

Another book of English reminiscences has come to my desk. This time it is by that much loved essayist and poet, E. V. Lucas. He calls his volume, "Reading, Writing and Remembering" (Harper's); and though there is much, happily, of himself in his pages, he says at the beginning that he set out to write only of his literary life. Therefore, to one's infinite relief, there is no family record to be gone over, with wearisome details as to ancestry. We gleam enough of his forbears to get a swift picture of his background. Then he takes us into the romantic 'eighties and 'nineties, and we share with him his friendships and enthusiasms.

* * *

His Recollections

Mr. Lucas is 63 now. He had no intention—an admirable plan—of putting on paper his recollections of a full literary life until he had reached the age of three score years and ten; but an attack of lumbago laid him up last year.

"Being too ill to invent, always a matter of great difficulty to me," he confesses, "I found it amusing to remember; and since the lumbago was making me ten years older I was a reminiscer on my own rigid terms."

"My old editor F C Burnand to whom a pun offered irresistible attractions, said that the books which men wrote about themselves fell into two categories, autobiography and ought-not-to-be-ography. I don't know yet to which of these groups the present work belongs — no doubt, if to the second I shall be told—but, in any case it belongs to you."

* * *

It was in the autumn of 1903 that Mr. Lucas was invited to join the staff of Punch, and his first appearance at the Mahogany Tree as Thackeray called the Punch table, was on January 6, 1904 armed with a knife given him by St. Loe Strachey with which, some day, to carve his initials. The chair was that occupied before him by Phil May, whom he was immediately succeeding, another writer being at that moment more needed on the staff than another artist.

He tells of those who were there that day; and one of the finest things in his book is the chapter of tributes he pays to his confreres, past and present. In particular he mentions E V Knox who contributes under the nom de guerre of "Evoe," who has brought to Punch some of the divine scorn and anger with which all the best satirists are endowed. Then he goes on lightly to say:

"My only quarrel with Knox is that he took, for Punch, the pseudonym 'Evoe'; one result being that my letterbox is congested with missives from readers who, confusing 'Evoe' with 'E. V. L.,' thank him for the pleasure which his articles have given them; very tedious perusing for me."

* * *

Bit of Shyness

Mr Lucas has known and met everybody in the artistic world of London. He admits that he is shy and sometimes he would forego, in his youth, an invitation to a fascinating luncheon because he was afraid to ring the bell; and often he has actually gone hungry because he dreaded entering a restaurant alone!

This quality of shyness, or modesty, whichever you wish to call it gets into his chapters. Sometimes one may not agree with certain statements he makes. Of Stephen Phillips, for example, he says:

"Poor Phillips, his star remained in the ascendant for only a brief season and was then utterly extinguished. I am sure that this was wrong: he may not have been the inspired poet that Sidney Colvin thought him, or the inspired dramatist that William Archer thought him, but he was the author of some very beautiful passages. It was a case of sacrifice through excess of friendship and zeal. Immoderate praises from the few can antagonize the many. Phillips was the victim at once of this laudation and of his own inability to stand oats, as the grooms say, and he ingloriously faded out. Never does one see his work today, either in his own books or in anthologies, yet 'Marpessa' is filled with loveliness.'

Philips is represented in several anthologies, both here and in England; and the last act of "Herod" is enough to give him a permanent place in our literature.

He gives us some lively anecdotes. In speaking of Lionel Johnson and Francis Thompson he states that the former had his competency; but the latter lived from hand to mouth. "This," he continues, "was the time when all the new poets' names ended with 'son—Lionel Johnson, Francis Thompson, John Davidson, William Watson, leading that witty cleric H C Beeching, to a poem on the subject with a couplet referring to the slopes of Pernasus, the slopes

Disappointment

Mr. Lucas has had many recoils upon the sight of favorite authors. Why we are so exacting about the looks of our pet writers, when there is no standard for artists and musicians, he cannot explain.

'I think," he says, "that the earliest disappointment of this kind from which I suffered was when at Oxford, in 1892, I heard Walter Pater lecture on some Renaissance subject, and was displeased by his heavy jowl and want of esprit.' But Yeats looks the poet. Rupert Brook seemed to be more than a poet; Apollo himself, and Richard Le Gallienne, whom he used to see in the 'nineties, might even be thought to have been made up by Clarkson on strict poetical lines.

There is much of Barrie, Henley, Hardy, Gladstone, duMaurier, Henry James and a host of others now dead and gone. The book has fragrance, mellowness and kindness. Above all, it has wit, as one would expect from this writer.

Lippincott's have just published in this country a charming book of essays by Lucas called "Lemon Verbena." Both volumes may be read with profit and pleasure.

the four youths worked a man about 35 years old sat behind the wheel of the burglars' car and directed the quartet, admonishing them occasionally to hurry lest the police arrive.

Fifty cartons of cigarettes and $40 in cash were taken from this store and while police were investigating they saw an automobile containing five youths approach along Woodlawn st.

Police in a cruiser car chased the fugitives from Chelsea to Revere and into Everett, firing several shots all of which went wild. The fugitive car, later found to have been stolen in Everett, whirled into a driveway in Harvard st., Everett, and when the police pulled up the five had vanished.

HEARD ROBBERS WORKING

Michael J. Daley of 3?? Broadway at Woodlawn ave., Everett, told police that he was awakened by a crash of glass, and when he looked out his window, which is above a chain store, he saw two boys on the sidewalk below and heard voices in the store.

"What are you doing down there?" Daley asked. "Are you doing a good job?"

From the store came another voice which said:

"Hurry up. Hurry up. Is the cop coming yet?"

Two youths emerged hurriedly then from the store, piled into the car which whirled around in the street, almost tipping, and the burglars were away.

YOUTH HELD FOR QUIZ

Police traced the probable course of the bandit crew from Stoneham, where a small Pine st. grocery store was entered and $6 taken.

The next break was in the Reynolds Drug Store, Main st., Wakefield, where goods valued at $5? were taken.

Following this the thieves apparently drove to Medford where they broke into chain stores in Middlesex and Riverside aves.

A Sylvan st., Malden, chain store was next on the list and this was followed by breaks in three Everett chain stores. From there the marauders went to Chelsea for the return visit and where they were eventually discovered.

Several hours later, Chelsea police picked up a youth who was unable to explain a bad cut on his hand. He was held as a suspicious person and police refused to reveal his identity although admitting he was an Everett resident.

The method used in the breaks was the same in each case. The gang either forced or smashed in the front door, in several cases damaging them beyond repair.

Cheering Thousands Jam Arena to Hear Former Nominee Back Ticket

By JOHN T. LAMBERT

rostrum from which he has addressed three of the greatest, most intense and spontaneous audiences in the history of American politics.

In 1928 he advocated his own candidacy for the presidency. Boston acclaimed him with the fervor which the sentimental Italians had lavished upon Wodorow Wilson at Milan.

In 1930, he advocated the election of Joseph B. Ely, whom he loves with the parental solicitude of father for son. Boston again showered him with plaudits.

Last night he stood upon the same rostrum, a plain American citizen, seeking no favor, office or emolument, but pleading the cause of Franklin D. Roosevelt, his friend "Frank," who proposed him for the presidency at San Francisco in 1920, who fought the fateful battle in his behalf at Madison Square Garden in 1924, and who lovingly termed him "The Happy Warrior" at Houston where he received the presidential nomination by acclamation.

The others it now seems, were mere manifestations of attachment to Al Smith. This one was a bedlam of passion for him.

When he neared the amphitheater, the vast crowd, suspecting his approach arose spontaneously. Gov. Ely, for whom the crowd had demonstrated its admiration, was thrice interrupted in his speech. As Smith entered the hall the salvos of applause burst forth. The sight of Smith unleashed the tornado.

Sea of Flags Wave on Appearance of Happy Al

Men and women waved a sea of flags to him. Cheers and shouts for him rang out, swelling to a chorus as the waves roll upon the shore. In a transport of rapture, they gave vent to their emotion with an impulse that those who could not understand might term hysteria. Alfred E. Smith, in thirty years on the political stage, had never before been the object of any demonstration so overwhelming in its tenderness and devotion.

He raised his hand for silence. "Mr. Chairman," he said. Thunderous applause was converted into deep silence by his power over his audience. They seemed to love the sound of his voice.

He pitched right into it. He had had a wonderful day, he said. Great crowds everywhere. Platform receptions—he nearly fell off the train at New Haven. He had signed 5000 signature albums, it seemed to him. At Providence, a magnificent audience.

"And finally the climax of it all—Boston." The Boston he venerates and which returns his affection.

Then, with sledge-hammer force, the first striking blow of his campaign oratory—

"And I will state in the time allotted to me that my purpose is to ask for the unqualified and complete support of Franklin D. Roosevelt."

He had made the declaration they had hoped to hear. He was on the line where they knew in their heart he ultimately would be—for Roosevelt and Garner and the Democratic ticket. And here in Boston, his and their Boston, where they wanted him to say it so nobody would misunderstand.

Just Plain Frank to the Happiest of Warriors

Five times he called his friend "Frank" Roosevelt in what the country will call the most thoughtful and effective speech of his in this campaign of national importance.

Hoover, he recalled, had attacked "Frank" Roosevelt in his Detroit speech, saying, as Smith phrased it, "if they stopped all the public works—stopped everything—the President would have to take $500,000,000 from the veterans, and he said that would be a great injustice."

"A great injustice to whom?" Smith demanded. "To the taxpayer," Smith insisted. "That is the gross injustice, because there are men receiving money from the government today that not only never left the country, but never entered the foreign service, were not injured, and have no disability directly traceable to the war."

He noted that Hoover had blamed the failures of his administration upon the Democratic House. What about the Republican members. Was he able to hold them? He was not. That takes leadership. And he went on.

Full Praise From Al to Massachusetts Leaders

"While we are talking on that subject, what about the governors of our Eastern States here? What about Governor Roosevelt? He had a hostile Republican Legislature to deal with, but he made a record of achievement that made him prominent enough throughout the United States to be nominated for the Presidency." Ely in Massachusetts, Cross in Connecticut and Moore in New Jersey had accomplished their programs, despite the sort of opposition that Hoover is unable to overcome.

William Allen White had attacked "Frank" Roosevelt, as well as himself, so Smith must take care of that.

"Four years ago," said Smith, "this man White was saying we shall have a cultured man who would not be stumped if someone asked him about the Italian Primitive. Of course, he was digging at me. Hoover was the cultured man. I was the product of the sidewalks.

"Today, with White, Frank Roosevelt is overcultured. He went to too many schools.

"In 1932, Frank has too much education. What about Hoover? He was born in a one-room house, the son of the village blacksmith, his relatives poor farmers.

"Let me analyze the whole thing. In 1928, Hoover was the cultured man and I was the poor fish pedlar; in 1932, Frank Roosevelt is the cultured man and poor Herbert is the little poor boy. Don't let them deceive you with this nonsensical buncombe.

Smith was in Boston, the citadel of his affection—so he must talk plain. We are all like one family sitting around the table. Let's be out with it and look the situation clearly in the face. So, he went on, in measured words, with intonation that suggested he was talking into the private ear of every individual in his audience.

Pleads With Democrats to Hold Together in Fight

"I was not satisfied with the Chicago convention, and I know that you were not satisfied with it. Listen, we will settle our troubles in our party. We don't want any advice, and above everything else we don't want any sympathy from Senator Moses or any of his Republican cohorts. They are now trying to incite my friends and your friends, to create the idea there is a big storm of protest and a great big feeling or resentment.

"Now I say that two wrongs never make a right. They were absolutely wrong in 1928. They forgot the principles upon which this country was founded. There can be no bigotry or resentment in the Catholic heart. But we shall not let them succeed in their desire to divide our party again."

Then came the climax. The world was listening in, and Smith the warrior of democracy, was determined to put in his final lick lest there be no mistake, lest there be no insidious implication against his earnest interest in the outcome of this presidential contest. This is what he declared, in his peroration, word for word.

"I confidently believe, after a perfect study of the whole situation, that the salvation of our country, the progress that it must make to get away from the stagnation of business and employment, lies upon the success of the Democratic ticket under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt and John Garner."

Cheers Greet Appeal for Entire Democratic Ticket

He paused to let it sink in. There must be no doubt about it. It did sink in. There was no doubt about it. A vociferous cheer rent the quiet. It was two cheers rolled into one—a cheer for the prospect of Democratic victory with all elements united; a cheer for the generosity of Smith, in fighting trim for his party, binding the wounds that were steadily, if not too rapidly healing since the remarkable Chicago convention. He had done what others who had been defeated by him in their time had done. If the thunderous applause of a vast audience can be interpreted, it was in large measure for the man who stood before them as "The great sport of American politics."

Smith's worshippers have always said he talks without restraint. In this ovatious, admiring throng he found himself at home, where unbridled enthusiasm would accept his every declaration. He was, in turn, humorous, philosophical, but largely indignant in his attack upon what he regarded as the blundering inefficiences of the Hoover administration.

The amplification was ragged. "Talk into the amplifier," shouted an auditor who had a better voice than ears.

"There are enough of them here," said Smith, pointing to the layout of numerous microphones. "I don't want to play any favorites. Let's give the little one a chance," he said pointing to a puny mike that was to amplication what an Austin is to a full-sized motorcar.

"Half Billion" Just Mere Chickenfeed to the G. O. P.

The greatest sin of the administration, he asserted, was in leaving the people in the dark about finances. Hoover let the deficit grow to two billions. He was drifting along, hoping that things would take care of themselves. Prosperity might be around the corner. And this is the party that claims to have a monopoly on all the brains.

"Since the new tax bill was passed, the deficit has grown another half a million? Did I say, 'half a million?' That's chicken feed; small change. It has grown half a billion."

Calvin Coolidge, of Northampton, got his attention. At the mention of the name there was a chorus of boos. Smith held up his hand for silence. "Can that," he exclaimed. "I'm talking of a successful President."

Hoover complains that the depression is a shock from abroad. "Four years ago, he was saying we are a self-containing nation," Smith observed.

Parkers Paid for Positions Near Arena

Wise out-of-towners who sought to get a parking place close to the Arena last night, found their wisdom costly and their foresight worthless. They parked their cars in the early afternoon on streets about the Arena. Many left lights burning expecting to offset the police wrath until after the big Democratic rally.

But it didn't work out that way. Supt. Crowley surveyed the machines packed about the Arena and radio warnings were broadcast at short intervals to drivers to get the cars out of the vicinity of the Arena.

Nearly 50 cars were towed to garages and parking places by police and the owners had to pay the expense.

"How about 'Old Potato, Al?'" said one of those piercing voices that gets into every audience.

"I mean the Idaho Potato," said Smith. "The Idaho potato sold him a gold brick, when he got him to call a special session for farm relief, and the session tinkered for fifteen months with the tariff, until Grundy could get in all the favors he wanted for himself and his special interests."

Mr. Smith was cynosure of all eyes, as Mr. Dooley would say, but there were others present in distinguished array, to let loose upon the audience a barrage of eloquent and harmonious oratory not commonplace within the Democratic Party of Massachusetts.

Mrs. Smith was there. The audience gave her a greeting that brought the blush of joy to her face. She returned the compliment with a kiss, thrown from her gloved hand. And sat back, comfortably and modestly, a spectator of the adulation heaped upon her husband.

Bernard M. Baruch was over from New York. "I wanted to see one of these famous Boston receptions to Smith," he said at the Copley Plaza. "It was overwhelming. It is beyond imagination," he exclaimed at the Arena, at 10:10 by the clock. At that hour the "Sidewalks of New York," as played by Joe White's military band, had taken on the solemnity of a hymn of the crusaders.

Leaders All in Harmony at Greatest of Rallies

The rostrum was overloaded with harmony. Gov. Ely, in one of his best speeches delivered a two-barreled attack upon the "campaign of misrepresentation" alleged by him to be waged by Lieut.-Gov. Youngman, and a four-barreled appeal for victory for Roosevelt and Garner.

"Like Alfred E. Smith and all other good Democrats we are appealing for victory for Roosevelt and Garner and the entire state ticket," he declared.

"Mayor Curley, in a flight of striking oratory, pointed to Ely and appealed to the audience. "Our victory would not be complete. Massachusetts would not be performing her duty to herself unless she overwhelmingly returned to the State House the able, capable man who sits there—Joe Ely."

To the great audience, the mayor declared that "The American worker and the American business man have learned to their sorrow that Herbert C. Hoover, during the past four years, has been the best President for the European nations ever elected by the American people."

Bay State's Big Three Cheered at Stand

Governor Ely and Senator David I. Walsh came upon the rostrum at that moment. They walked to the side of Mayor Curley and the three of them faced the magnificent audience, while the salvos of the applause seemed to lift the roof two or three inches higher.

Senator Walsh, graceful as usual, limited his speech out of deference to the guest of the evening. "When the pitcher is weakening, and the game is going wrong, what do the bleachers yell?" he asked. He answered that one himself. "Take him out. Take him out."

"And the country, grown weary of his leadership, is yelling 'Take Hoover out. Take Hoover out,'" the senator explained. Knowing him for a wise political sage, the audience took note of this statement by him:—

"It is my conviction, from personal observation in all parts of the United States, that this election is settled. The voters will elect Franklin D. Roosevelt and John Garner. They insist upon a change."

Chairman Joseph A. Maynard of the Democratic state committee opened the affair with the declaration, "The spirit of victory is in the air. Roosevelt in the Nation, Ely in Massachusetts." The mention of these two names stirred the first of a series of demonstrations that were prolonged for four hours.

Garner Praised by Bay State Congress Trio

Dist.-Atty. Foley presented as the chairman of the rally Prof. Frank L. Simpson, who was for three successive years the grand master of the Grand Lodge of Masons of Massachusetts. The three Democratic congressmen east of the Connecticut river came on, one by one. The nice things they said about Jack Garner must have made that Texas plainsman's ears burn.

"We know Jack Garner," said Congressman John W. McCormack. "We'll go down the line for him. When he appointed John Douglass chairman of the Committee on Education, Jack Garner deliberately slaughtered the Smith-Towner bill, and you know what that means to the public and private schools of Massachusetts. It saves them from unwarranted interference and unrestricted regulation by the national government."

Congressman John J. Douglass confirmed this. And added:

"I was introduced to Jack Garner by the late Congressman James A. Gallivan, of beloved memory. When Garner left, Jim Gallivan said to me, 'There's the fairest, squarest fellow in Congress. He hasn't got an intolerant bone in his body. Follow him, John Douglass, and you'll never go wrong.'"

Douglass observed it was Navy Day; "and there won't be any navy to celebrate if Herbert Hoover, with his ideas of internationalism, happened to be re-elected."

Klan Can Go to Hell, Was Garner's Reply

Congressman William P. Connery, Jr., of Lynn, added his meed of praise to the qualities of Garner. "In 1922," said Connery, "they asked Jack Garner to join the Klan. Jack Garner said, 'You go plumb to hell.'"

"The Republicans betrayed labor," said Connery. "They betrayed the farmer. And I don't care whether you are for the bonus or not, the blackest day in American history was when President Hoover turned the guns upon the defenseless veterans at Washington, 216 of whom wore the Congressional Medal of Honor for conspicuous gallantry while serving in battle beneath the flag of their country."

It was a Democratic night. A marvelous audience. Splendid speeches. Harmony unsurpassed. And a triumph for The Happy Warrior.

ALFRED E. SMITH'S APPEAL FOR A UNITED PARTY FOR ROOSEVELT, GARNER AND ELY

Hoover Rule Flayed for Laxity

"Mr. Chairman and my very beloved friends of Massachusetts. I am not out of place. I am not even in the slightest degree away from home. I am home in every sense of that meaning.

"I left New York at 10 o'clock today. I took a railroad train and I nearly fell off of that at New Haven.

"And I signed my name about 6000 times and I finally arrived in Providence to get a great greeting, and go out before a great audience, and finally there comes the climax of it all, Boston.

"I came here for a purpose and I propose before this audience tonight in the time allotted to me to show that the purpose is well-founded, and that is to come in to New England and ask for the unqualified support of Franklin D. Roosevelt for President. Now we are all friends in this gathering and we are sitting around the table.

"Yes, I wanted to weave a kind of little melodrama with its serious and its comic side and I entitled it 'The Republican Failure, or 'What Happened to the Republicans at the Present Time.'

PICTURES AUDIENCE

"The first and leading character of the play is the President of the U. S. and, if I am satisfied of anything, I am satisfied of one thing, and that is that engineers and public accountants consume about 60 per cent of all the white paper that is manufactured in this country in making reports."

At this point someone in the audience cried:

"Well, listen, there are enough of them here. It is a hard thing for me to play favorites. I was trying to give a break to the little fellows.

"I can see a radio audience after listening to the Detroit speech of President Hoover. I can imagine their frame of mind. I can even imagine their present condition. After they listened in, and it reminds me of a story that I heard away down on the lower East Side of New York a good many years ago when a man was suffering from an attack of pneumonia and the doctor came to the patient's house and the doctor and a few friends had taken a few stimulants and at that early hour in the morning—2 o'clock—the stimulant was too much for the doctor and he leaned his head upon the bed of the patient and said, 'Count.'

"And the doctor fell asleep and at half-past five in the morning the patient was saying 96, 97, 98. That was the impression from the Detroit speech to the audiences generally who were listening in around the country.

PEOPLE IN DARK

"If I was to be asked tonight what in my opinion, was the greatest failure of the existing administration, I would be compelled to say that they left the people of this country entirely in the dark with regard to the all important function of government—the proper adjustment of our financial condition.

"There is no doubt that they should be able to explain it, but the explanation was not in their favor and it was, therefore, withheld.

"In 1930 the U. S. Treasury was facing a deficit of $1,000,000,000 $1,000,000,000.

"Not a single word was said about it; not a single line was penned about it. Why? Because the administration was living in the hope that things would rectify themselves. And if you study that expression to its last analysis it is the whole story of the present Republican administration, living constantly in the hope that things would take care of themselves, that Divine Providence would intervene and that there would be no occasion for anything [illegible] government.

"Well, that was all right. They [illegible] nobody knew anything about [illegible] to the following [illegible] when the last budget was being prepared and there was an additional billion dollars of deficit.

NO CUT IN EXPENSES

"Then it was that the administration suddenly awoke to the necessity for new and additional forms of taxation. And consequently in the spring of this year at a time when the people could least bear it, at a time when taxation was a great hardship, at a time when taxation was bound to retard business and economic recovery, we had the so-called nuisance taxes imposed upon the American people, a tax on gasoline, the additional penny when you mailed a letter, taxes on amusements. Every form of taxation was imposed upon the people at a time when they were least able to bear it.

"In the meantime, with every effort at hand, absolutely nothing was done by the Republican administration to curtail the cost of government. Although it was urged from the platform of 1920 right up to the platform of 1928, the promises of re-organization and reconstruction of the federal government, in order to cut out overlapping, waste and duplication of effort looking not only to efficiency but to a greater economy in the conduct of the nation's business.

"Worse than that was the incompetent handling of the proposed sources of taxation and the revenue that might flow from it. And all this, my friends, in the hands of the party that deliberately and distinctly tells the American people that they have all the brains, that they are the people who know how to run the government, that we are just a mob, and that we have not intelligent leadership, that we have not constructive suggestions, that we are not able to do it, that they are the ones that have all the brains and all the ability. And they get that over with the American people, unfortunately, because they have controlled this country for so many years, since the Civil war, and had representatives abroad during an equal period.

"The proud boast of the only party.

"I picked up the paper the other day and my eye accidentally fell upon an article that showed the costs for this fiscal year, beginning on the first of July, is a half a million deficit in the revenue proposed under the new forms of taxation. What did I say? Half a million? Oh, I meant half a billion.

SCHOOL FOR LEADERS

"A half a million chicken feed. It's half a billion.

"Well, if this contention that the best brains is in the Republican party, let's take a look at the states of this Union.

"Seated here in this auditorium tonight we can recall to our minds that 60 per cent of the governors of the states of the Union are Democrats.

"You must remember that the governorship is the primary school for the production of our Presidents. Every successful and progressive President of the U. S. during my time has been a former governor of a state.

"Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson and Calvin Coolidge.

"Can that, can that," declared ex-Governor Smith as a few in the audience started to boo the name of former President Coolidge.

"I'm talking about successful Presidents. I would love to have some comparison made with their records and the records of some of our Republican governors. We had a couple in Indiana and you know where to go look for them. They are in a place where they cannot get out.

"Now let's take a little look at that Detroit speech. The President in that speech, speaking about the finances of the country, said when asked about the Democratic candidate, Franklin D. Roosevelt, that even if he stopped all public work, stopped everything he would finally have to take $500,000,000 from the veterans, and he said that would be a gross injustice.

"It's a gross injustice to whom? To the taxpayers. That's the gross injustice, because there are men receiving money from the federal government today that not only never left this country but never saw any service, were never injured in the service or had any disability directly traceable to the service."

(A voice made an indistinct remark.)

"I don't know what you said. But I know what I said. The injustice there is to the taxpayer.

Salvation of Nation Rests With Roosevelt, Says Al

"Now I said we were home tonight and that compels a very frank speech and we are around the table and I am talking to you and this is what I want to emphasize to you. I was not satisfied with the Chicago convention and I know that you were not satisfied with it. We will settle those troubles in our party. We don't want any advice, and above everything else we don't want any sympathy from Senator Moses, of New Hampshire, or from his Republican cohorts . . . They are trying now to incite my friends and your friends who believe as we do that because everything was not as it should have been, according to their idea, that there is a great big storm of protest and a great big feeling of resentment.

"Now I say this, that two wrongs never made a right. They were absolutely wrong in 1928. They forgot the principles upon which this country was established and because of which she flourished. But don't let us forget them. There can be no bigotry, there can be no resentment in the Catholic heart. Let us not forget that. We have been taught, and it is impossible to divorce ourselves from it, that our first consideration is this country . . . I confidently believe that after a perfect study of the whole situation, that the salvation of our country, the progress that it must make to get away from the stagnation of business and unemployment, lies upon the success of the Democratic ticket under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt and John Garner."—From ex-Governor Smith's speech in the Arena.

HOOVER BLAMED

"Now, I was amused in that Detroit speech to see the President blaming all his failures of the administration on the Democratic House of Representatives. That's an odd way of getting away from it.

"Blaming on somebody else, but what about the Republican members of that House? Was he able to hold them? He was not. Was he able to deliver them to his policies? He was not.

"While we are on this subject, what about the governor of our great state of New York? What about Gov. Roosevelt, who had a Republican Legislature to deal with but at the same time made a record of achievement that made him prominent enough throughout the United States to be nominated for the Presidency.

HOOVER NO LEADER

"What about your own governor? The constructive reforms inaugurated in this state for the benefit and in the interests of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts were inaugurated upon his initiative with the force of public opinion behind him, in spite of a Republican Legislature.

"What about Governor Cross of Connecticut? He had to battle with a Republican Legislature and a record sufficient to insure his re-election was the result, and he brought it about in spite of a hostile Republican Legislature. The same could be said of Governor Moore of New Jersey, twice governor, and he never had the Legislature in sympathy with him.

"What is the main trouble? What is the matter with the leading character of our drama, the President of the United States? The trouble is that he lacks the power of leadership even over the members of his own party.

"And he lacks the power of appeal to the people themselves.

"Now the President in the Detroit speech complained very persistently about an item of $322,000,000 that he claims was forced upon him by the Democratic legislatures in Washington. Well, what is the truth about that? Two-thirds of that amount is subject to his direct control and I challenge anybody to deny it, two-thirds of it.

"The other third is for federal highways and, incidentally, let me say that the third is the only part of all that money that gave employment to anybody, or provided a job for a single man.

"And I am forced to the conclusion tonight that the Democratic legislators in Washington did a good job when they forced that on Hoover.

DEPRESSION STILL HERE

"Let us give it another thought. He says, 'It can be demonstrated that the tide has turned and that the forces of depression are in retreat.' Why, the real fact is, if you take New York city as the barometer, and it ought to be a fair one, there are more people out of work today than there were a year ago.

"The real truth is that for a year and a half President Hoover refused to recognize this condition. He had statistics come from his State Department to minimize it and he lived in the eternal hope that it might cure itself, and after he was forced to admit it and acknowledge it, he spent two years in explaining to everybody that he had it licked.

"Now a thing that it takes two years to lick is a pretty formidable one. Well, another excuse for the great trouble is shocks from abroad. Hoover once said that we were a self-centered nation and that we did not need any help from anybody, but when bad times came upon us the shocks from abroad were not a sufficient excuse and he changed his tune and we had to have some shocks from aboard and when we did not get them it was called a shock.

"What was the first real mistake of the Hoover administration? It was made by a man without experience, although built up in the 1928 campaign as a great engineer and a man with a great knowledge of government and a man with a great knowledge of all foreign affairs. His great mistake was that he fell for Borah.

"He confessed that it was necessary for him to promise an extraordinary session of Congress for farm relief, and Hoover called it and submitted to them his big measures, but the legislators immediately began to tinker with the tariff and for 15 solid months they left this country and these conditions in a state of chaos until the scientists and the specialists got everything into that tariff that they wanted.

TINKER ON TARIFF

"And, while it was sitting, business men and economists were advising them and the country was upset, and just a few days ago I read a copy of a letter in a New York newspaper that the President had sent to the tariff commission, suggesting a further advance in some of the tariff schedules.

"Well, let us see how far from wrong these accountants were. They knew the result of that. They were able to scoop in. They saw a rapid decline in our exports working injury and detriment to the American people. They saw a great tariff wall being erected against it. And they foresaw that the kingdom of Great Britain, always a free-trade country, set up a tariff wall against the United States to reciprocate the tariff for the treatment we gave to her for her imports into this country.

HORSESHOE STILL UP

"All of the large European countries owe us money. They have not got it to pay us. They cannot pay it. The only way that they can pay us is in goods and what do we say? We say 'No.'

"And that understanding of our foreign affairs is the product of the wonderful minds that they have; they are the only people fitted to rule this country, and the Democrats are lacking in an understanding of this great problem; we haven't got the background; we are a mob and they are the intelligent people. In the household leading the public are all the brains of the universe. In the homes of the Democrats they never take the horseshoe from the door.

Unqualified Faith in Roosevelt

"I came here for the purpose and I propose to this audience tonight in return to show that the purpose was well-founded and that purpose is to come into New England and ask for the unqualified faith and complete support of Franklin D. Roosevelt for President." — From Ex-Governor Smith's Boston Arena address.

"And the funny part of it is that all of the high administrative officers in Washington completely report the plight of our neighbors abroad! And when they are sinking and call for a life preserver, the national administration throw them an anchor.

"We have got another actor who plays an important part in this federal role. And that is the Secretary of the Treasury. He went down to Maine in the recent election to talk to the Republican party of that state, and on the same night Gene Tunney was there.

"And the Secretary of the Treasury thought he would indulge in what he calls a pleasantry, and he said—wait until I quote it exactly, he might be listening in—he said: 'I suppose that Tunney has been called up here to raise the intellectual level of the Democratic party.'

"There is sarcasm for you. There is a fellow who is sitting up on a throne and looking down at the subject.

FLAYS FAKE ECONOMY

"And that suggested to me that we might think a little bit tonight of what is the intellectual level of the Republican party. All during the years since the war and particularly during the Coolidge administration, we heard nothing but press reports from Washington about great economy.

"Here we had a man that rose early in the morning, spent all day long and even when he rested his head on the pillow at night, he was worrying about this 5-cent piece that might be taken away from the American public.

"He said we were going to save a lot of money by preventing them from printing the blue stripes on the mail bags; when the mail bag is all white it doesn't cost so much. And he said, 'We are going to hunt through the waste-paper baskets every night and see that no clerk throws away a lead pencil'; that he will go right down to the rubber, and on starry nights when the moon is bright we are going to be able to turn off the electric lights.

Coolidge Booers Halted by Al

"Every successful and progressive President of the United States during my time has been a former governor of a State — Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, Woodrow Wilson and Calvin Coolidge (boos) Can that! Can that! I am speaking about successful Presidents." — Former Governor Smith in his speech at the Arena.

WRONG ON DEBTS

"I heard the old director of the budget one night describing the things they were doing in respect to the budget, and he reminded me of Colonel Sellers. You remember Colonel Sellers, Mulberry Sellers, the fellow selling the eye ointment, 'Nine million people in Africa with sore eyes.' Each bottle cures one eye. Eighteen million bottles. There's millions in it. There's millions in it.'

"But, during all this time, with all this information at hand, with the highly organized Department of Commerce that was supposed to keep its hand upon the pulse of the business and commerce of the world, not one of them ever foresaw the crash.

"They stood there in perfect simplicity and perfect repose hoping that Divine Providence and His infinite wisdom would continue and they would get the credit for it.

"They encouraged speculation. About that there can be no doubt. They absolutely failed to explain our foreign difficulties because if they did explain them, they did nothing about them.

"They were entirely wrong in the plan that they had for foreign debts, either because they made the revenue so out of line that it was impossible and was never incurred, and the Secretary of the Treasury himself changed his mind with respect to the advisability of the sales tax, and when he declared in favor of it, knocked the head off everybody that gave him an argument against it.

PRESIDENT FAILED

"Now I am going to get over the next performer very quickly. That's Secretary of War Hurley. I don't know how much he has to do with Divine precedent with respect to his treatment of the bonus expeditionary forces, but I know that statement was wrong. The President of the United States is the commander-in-chief of the army and navy. These men that camped in Washington belonged to the U. S. army. It was his business to go and talk to them.

"It was his business to explain the situation of the finances of the country with respect to the claim that they were making. That wasn't too much for him to do. He should have done it.

"Instead of that they were encouraged to remain there in Washington until the sanitary conditions surrounding their camp life was such that they had to be driven from Washington by the armed forces of the United States. And the genial Secretary of War went out to try to explain how it should be done.

"Now, we had another little fellow to deal with and I wouldn't miss it for this hall. I wouldn't overlook it. That's my old-time friend William Allen White, the editor-in-chief of the Emporia Gazette out in Kansas.

CULTURE SHIFT

"He is a constant well-spring of joy. He is a thing of beauty. He is the United States' more-than-generous contribution to the gaiety of nations. He is a great writer. In 1928 he said he saw a very bright future for the creative markets of the United States, provided Hoover was elected President. Then we would have culture. He would not be even stumped if someone asked him what he thought about the Italian Premier. Of course he was digging at me. Hoover was the cultured man.—I was the product of the sidewalks. That's what William Allen White said.

"Wait until I show the double back acrobat he is. Along with everything else the man is an acrobat, and how he got away from Barnum is more than I can understand."

"In 1932 he has an entirely different story to tell. In 1932 he says Frank Roosevelt is over-cultured. He went to too many schools. And White writes an article in which he says that Roosevelt went to the exclusive boys' school at Groton and returned to Hyde Park to take the place of his father as country squire.

SUSPICIOUS OF MOSES

"In 1932 Frank had too much education. Why? What about Hoover? Oh, now we have the pathetic passage—that sorrowful part of American life—born in a little two-room house in a one-horse town in Iowa, where his father was a poor blacksmith and his relatives were all farmers.

"Now, let me analyze the whole thing. In 1928 Herbert was the cultured man and I was the fish pedlar. In 1932, Frank is the cultured man and poor Herbert is the little boy in the blacksmith shop.

"Now we have one more character to deal with. And we will do the best we can. He is the president pro tem of the Senate, the senator from New Hampshire.

"If I were picking a part for him in this drama, my mind would go back to the old-time play, 'The Ticket of Leave Man,' and I would give him the part of Hawkshaw the detective. I know the younger folks in the audience do not remember that old-time play, but I can see that some of the old gray hairs like my own were smiling and must understand the 'Ticket of Leave Man.' Hawkshaw was always in disguise. And one part of the play took the boys in the gallery was when he rushed in—'Now that the papers are signed who will take them?'

And the other fellow says, 'I will!' 'And who are you?' He tore off the whiskers and he said, 'Hawkshaw the detective.'

"Now, I am not a suspicious person by nature, not born that way. I have the kindliest feelings for every living being. But, I am a little bit suspicious when Senator Moses gets so terribly excited and wrought up and speaks with a sob in his voice because I wasn't nominated. What a terrible thing it was! And, when I see Senator Moses in Long Island in the month of September when there are no political meetings, and certainly none at a watering resort, where a grat majority of the people do not vote and where I have a great many friends, Democrats and Republicans, and he goes upon the platform and tells what a terrible thing was done to me, I am a little bit suspicious.

FLAREUP IN G. O. P.

"Now, I said that we were home tonight and that compels some pretty frank speech from me, because we are around the table and I am talking to you. And that's what I want to emphatically say to you. I was not satisfied with that Chicago convention.

"Everyone knew I was not satisfied. Listen. We will settle these troubles in our party. We don't want any advice and, above everything else, we want no sympathy from Senator Moses or from his Republican pow-wow.

"I spoke in Newark last Monday night, and there was a flare-up from every Republican paper in the country. Why? Because I told them something that they didn't like to hear. I went down to Jersey to do two things—first, to try and convince the people of this country that the Republican party is absolutely not on the level on the prohibition issue. And I succeeded.

"And secondly, I proposed to show to the country that the money required to spread propaganda on religious bigotry in 1928 was supplied by the Republican party.

"Now what is lurking behind this suspicion that I have of this great love and devotion that is coming to me from these men all of a sudden overpowering me? I expect a bouquet every morning. What is lurking behind this suspicion? The fact that, I believe, they are again trying to work the religious issue to the detriment of the Democratic party with, what we call, the reverse English.

BIGOTRY BARRED

"They are trying to persuade your friends and my friends and people who believe as we do, that because everything was not as it should be according to their ideas that there is a great big storm of protest and a great big feeling of resentment.

"I say this, that two wrongs never make a right. They were absolutely wrong in 1928. They forgot the principles on which this country was established and because of which she has flourished. But don't let us forget them.

"There can be no bigotry and no resentment in the Catholic heart. There cannot be that. We have been taught, and it is impossible for us to divorce ourselves from it, that our first consideration is this country.

"We were taught in our English schools, as I get it, that Almighty God Himself made this country and hid it behind the veil of the centuries until civilization was able to take advantage of its great natural resources, and He allowed Columbus, in the Santa Maria, to pierce the veil that the United States might be opened to the world as the harbor of refuge and the haven of repose for the downtrodden and the oppressed of every land.

"It is from that standpoint that we view this country. It is because of that that we give it our allegiance. It is because of that that we give it our loyalty and devotion, and no cross-current of political issues will ever take it away from us.

NAMES TICKET

"And I confidently believe, after a study of the whole situation, that the salvation of the country in the crisis that it is now in, the progress that it must make to get away from the stagnation of trade, business and unemployment, lies upon the success of the Democratic ticket under the leadership of Franklin D. Roosevelt and John Garner.

"And let me conclude by speaking of the Democratic candidates in the New England district. It will take a little time to enumerate them all.

"They should be supported. The election of a Democratic Senate and a Democratic House of Representatives is absolutely essential to any success. You know as well as I do that what we do, we do by law.

"I just want to say something here in Massachusetts about your favorite son, your own Governor. I could work myself up to a white heat; I could spend half an hour on this platform, and I can only say what comes quick to my lips from a suppressed heart, that the leading figure of the national convention, your Governor, typifies in every respect the great majesty, the great dignity, the great loyalty and the great devotion of Massachusetts."

Scene of Culture Shifts in 4 Years

Ex-Governor Smith, in exposing the propaganda emanating from William Allen White, editor of the "Emporium Gazette," in Kansas, said in part:

"In 1928, Hoover was the cultured man and I was the fish pedlar. In 1932, Frank Roosevelt is the cultured man and poor Herbert is the little boy—I remember his father's blacksmith shop."

BROKER, G. O. P. CHIEF SCORED IN BALLOT LIE

New York, Oct. 28 (U.P.)—The New York Stock Exchange was called on today to discipline a prominent brokerage firm for distributing false information over its private wires intended to aid the candidacy of President Hoover.

The demand was made by officials of the Litery Digest, now conducting a presidential poll, who refused to accept a retraction proferred by the brokerage firm.

Implicated in the charge of distributing a baseless and false story are Winthrop Mitchell & Co., brokers of 26 Broadway, and Raymond Benjamin of California, member of the Republican National convention, personal friend and close confidante of President Hoover and recognized by all leading Republicans as the chief Hoover strategist in the campaign.

Complaint was made to the stock exchange directors after it was learned that Winthrop Mitchell & Co., said to be actively interested in the Republican campaign, sent out the following message to more than a score of branch offices on Oct. 1[illegible]:

"We are told that the Literary Digest has received over 35,000 letters in the last ten days from people who originally voted for Roosevelt on the poll and now wish the ballots changed to Hoover."

The false report was disseminated in defiance of the recent order from the stock exchange governors forbidding any member to send political propaganda to branches or clients.

Dr. William Seaver Woods, editor of the Digest, in a statement published today said he had traced the false report to a national party committee headquarters.

"Up until the time the falsehood was launched, the Digest had not received a single letter asking that a vote be changed," Dr. Woods announced.

G. O. P.-SOVIET PLOT CHARGED

New York, Oct. 28 (INS)—Warning against 11th-hour "Republican plots," James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic National Committee, today charged that the Hoover managers are engaged in instigating a scheme to induce Josef Stalin, dictator of Soviet Russia, to grant an interview to the effect that he is for Franklin D. Roosevelt for President for the purpose of furnishing the Republicans material for the allegation that Roosevelt is a "radical."

The interview, Farley said, would be "planted" in a London newspaper, cabled back to the United States and immediately the Republican leaders would raise the cry that Roosevelt, if elected, would bring about American recognition of Soviet Russia and advocate other radical policies.

Athens, Greece, Oct. 28—Samuel Insull, Jr., who had planned to join his father here, has changed his mind and is to sail today for America.

14 Naval Fliers Land After Peril in Fog

San Diego, Cal., Oct. 28 (AP)—Stranded in mid-air for hours by dense fog that swept in suddenly from the ocean and hid all landmarks, aviators of 14 naval planes were safe on the ground today as a result of a dramatic rescue and their own daring and skill.

Four planes crashed, one bursting into flames, as 12 pilots dived blindly through the fog. But the greatest injury to any of the men was a sprained finger.

CONTINENTAL'S BANK MERGER IS RELATED

A Department of Justice report on acquisition of the Plymouth County Trust Co. by the Boston-Continental National Bank, now closed, was detailed today in federal court at the trial of Joseph Stone of Brockton, former vice-president of the Boston institution.

The report was produced by Emio Smith of Washington, who was an agent of the Department of Justice from March, 1930, to January 10, 1932, and who said he made it after a conference in the office of an assistant United States attorney.

Harold O'Donnell, former assistant cashier, was again a witness for the third day.

Stone is charged in indictments with misapplying and abstracting funds, moneys and credits of the bank in the amount of $29,[illegible] "more or less," and with conspiracy to abstract and misapply $200,000 "more or less."

This will make O'Donnell's third day on the stand. Under the prodding of Atty. John M. Morrison, counsel for Stone, O'Donnell was questioned at length relative to a loan of $[illegible] to Stone by the bank February 2, 1931, when there was an alleged overdraft to his account of $24,561.57.

O'Donnell admitted that instead of an overdraft there was a credit balance in Stone's account at the opening of the bank on February 3, 1931, and also on December 23, 1930, when Stone as treasurer of the Westchester Discount Corporation got a loan of $10,000. O'Donnell had testified there was an overdraft on both days.

Farmers Run to Cover as Hunt Season Opens

Toronto, Ont., Oct. 28 (AP)—Firing furiously, thousands of residents of Ontario today participated in the greatest hunt the province has ever known. On a 175-mile front the hunters, attired in costumes ranging from conventional to weird, attacked pheasants and squirrels.

In several counties farmers went to their homes after locking up their barnyard fowl and even driving their cattle into the barns. They have bitter memories of previous hunts.

RIVAL'S LETTER IN HIS POCKET WINS DIVORCE

Men are forever getting into trouble with women by leaving letters in their pockets. When they are given letters by women to mail they usually forget them and there is a row.

But it's worse for a man to leave a letter he gets from a woman in his pocket. William P. Warren of Commonwealth ave. did that and now he's without a wife.

Mrs. Deborah Warren told Judge Poland in Suffolk court today that she found a letter in her husband's pocket in May, 1930, 11 months after her marriage.

The letter was from a girl friend in Worcester and mentioned previous good times and appointed a meeting place for another date. Mr. Warren was granted a decree nisi.

By WIN BROOKS

whirled 14,000 men and women about in one of Boston's greatest demonstrations. He was always the axis and around him whirled all the other figures of the Democracy.

He stood beaming, with upraised hand for more than five minutes gazing down into a sea of open-mouthed faces and fluttering flags as the crowd thundered its "Al! Al! Al!" Few men ever have aroused a Boston audience to a pitch of emotion like that. He smiled all the time. Mrs. Smith, standing near him, smiled only at first. She seemed the more affected.

• • •

A brown derby was raised atop a 20-foot pole by spectators on the floor as Smith arrived . . . Paul Bowser would have given his right eye for such a "house." . . . They all but hung from the rafters, they stood in the aisles and even the old second balcony press box was crowded to overflowing . . . They cheered and shouted and they also screamed, wave on wave of mass emotion finding an outlet in a sound like the roar of a great wind beating against the walls and the roof . . . There is something about Al Smith.

• • •

The horse was king at the Garden but the donkey was the whole show at the Arena . . . And the ringmaster wore no top hat, but the cocky old brown derby . . . In the several thousand who sought in vain to gain admittance were many who had bona fide blue invitation cards . . . Others who had white counterfeit cards managed to get in . . .

• • •

It was unfortunate that at the very height of Mayor Curley's oratory Gov. Ely and Senator Walsh arrived for the tremendous reception given them interrupted the mayor's speech for several minutes . . . Yet he is never at a loss and it was a night when unfortunate circumstances were overlooked . . . A few minutes later the mayor was bespeaking the reelection of "that able capable man there, Joe Ely" . . . The mayor has a keen hearing and a keen wit and the few boos that mingled with his own splendid welcome drew from him a greeting to "the few noisy Republicans who have managed to get in" . . .

• • •

The loud speaker system "faded" several times and it fell down completely for a few moments during Gov. Ely's address . . . This had all the appearance of another Youngman plot, some one shouted . . .

"Fix the loud speaker," was the cry during several of the preliminary speeches, but it remained for the guest of the evening to capitalize their failure for a laugh . . . "Well, listen," said Al, "there's enough of them here. Far be it from me to play favorites. I was only trying to give the little fellow a break" . . .

• • •

The "Republican lieutenant-governor," as mentioned by Gov. Ely and Calvin Coolidge, as mentioned by Al Smith, shared the heartiest boos of the evening . . . Smith had listed Coolidge among the successful Presidents and the crowd thought it was sarcasm and booed the name . . . "Can that!" shouted Smith. "Can that! I'm talking about successful Presidents" . . . And when the crowd saw he was serious the boos for Coolidge turned to applause . . .

• • •

Smith premised his address upon a melo-drama and proved himself a great actor, emulating Senator Moses cast in the role of Hawkshaw, the detective, and tearing off his false whiskers at the denouement of the play, "The Republican Failure" . . . "I don't know what you say, but I know what I say," he shouted after an interruption from the gallery . . .

• • •

There were so many political posters to be seen that they looked like a new kind of wall-paper . . . Senator Walsh's simile likening President Hoover to the failing pitcher in a big league ball game, with the crowd chanting, "Take him out!" got a big hand . . . Mrs. Smith, appearing three-quarters of an hour before her husband, blew a kiss to the crowd for a heart-warming welcome . . . The only announcement that didn't draw a cheer was Prof. Simpson's announcement that the girl ushers would now take up the collection.

• • •

A little man in Section M, North, read a newspaper all through the preliminary speeches until Smith appeared at 9:55 . . . Then he gave rapt attention to the meeting . . . Mayor Curley, arriving at the stage entrance where a group of mounted policemen, motorcycle officers and state troopers were drawn up at attention, thought of the military and the Bonus Army and remarked, "It looks like a Republican gathering except that I don't see the gas bombs." . . .

• • •

Congressman "Bill" Connery of Lyn got the first humor into the meeting with a Murphy-O'Reilly story told in a brogue you could cut with a knife . . . Everybody remarked that Mayor Curley looked in splendid health despite his big tour campaign . . . Smith always looks as if he had just stepped from the barber chair . . . Ward's Veteran Military Band concentrated on the "Sidewalks of New York" and proved a great improvement over the old iron-workers that used to inhabit the Arena . . . The large turnout of women despite the rain was a remarkable feature . . . When Prof. Simpson referred to prohibition as a "ghastly failure" the band blared "How Dry I Am" . . . Supt. Crowley, for the city's finest, and Capt. Beaupre for the state troopers, did a fine job of policing . . . George V. Brown, general manager of the Arena, characterized the police job as a masterpiece.

When Smith finished his speech at exactly 11 o'clock, waved his arm and shouted "Good night" through the mikes, there was still waiting outside a crowd of 2000 or more who had been outside the Arena all night. There is something about Al Smith.

MAIL MAN ASKS ALIMONY CUT, WIFE AGREES

Salem, Oct. 28—When Mrs. Elizabeth Randall and her son, Harold, walked into a camp at Asbury Grove, Wenham, last summer and found her estranged husband and Mrs. Elsie Saunders in scanty attire—why, they were only chatting.

The husband, Charles H. Randall, 59, a Lynn post office mail carrier, made this declaration in probate court today where he sought modification of a separate support decree under which he has been paying his wife $15 a week for seven years.

Randall declared that Miss Saunders has been his housekeeper since his wife left him, but Mrs. Randall, in her testimony, asserted that "there was another girl before Miss Saunders."

The mail carrier in support of his plea said that his salary has been cut, that he will be pensioned in four years and that he has three grown-up sons, two of whom should help support the mother.

One son, Harold, is a certified public accountant; a second son, Russell, is a lieutenant at West Point, drawing $3500 a year, it was brought out, and the third son, Charles, is in college.

Harold testified that he has been "trying for seven years to put some sense in my father's head," but that his father told him Mrs. Randall was "a better mother than she is a wife."

The surprise in the case came at the end when Mrs. Randall, over the protest of her counsel, said she was agreeable to modification of the decree.

THIS IS LIFE

Mrs. Roosevelt's Book Excellent Primer for Young Children

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

THERE IS ONE PRIZE sentence which will interest Massachusetts politicians in Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt's little book for small children titled, "When You Grow Up to Vote," published by Houghton Mifflin Co. It is in the chapter, "At the State House."

R. E. ROGERS

"The lieutenant governor helps in many ways. He is the head of the Senate and becomes governor himself if the governor goes out of the state."

That is probably all right in New York where Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Lehmann are the best of pals, but I should be glad to hear the comments of Messrs. Ely and Youngman.

Mrs. Roosevelt, already well known for many activities, particularly that of teaching in a New York private "progressive" school, has written her little book as a primer for children, one of the many which are being planned and written nowadays to take the stigma of the dry text-book out of the purveying of useful information to children.

13 Very Able Chapters

It covers, very briefly indeed, in some 13 chapters, the basic materials of civics. The chapters are entitled: "Our Friend the Policeman; Fire, Fire! White Wings; His Honor, the Mayor; Do You Live on a Farm? At the State House; The White House; The President Has Ten Secretaries; Why Do We Have Laws? We, the People; What Does the Judge Do? Who Pays Our Bills? Come to Our Party.

The last chapter, it is only fair to say, does not include an invitation to join the Democratic Party. It is a statement of the two party system, urging children to think ahead a little so as to be prepared to vote when that day comes.

The book, you will see, follows a natural order. It deals first with the parts of government about which the child may have some first hand knowledge, the policeman, the fireman, and the street cleaner. Then it goes on to municipal, state and national governments, the democratic control, taxation, and the party system. An admirable progression from the immediate to the distant, from the factual to the theoretical.

I wish I knew how old the children are whom Mrs. Roosevelt had in mind in writing this book. In the preface she says: "Perhaps in ten of twelve years you are going to vote." That is, the child reader is supposed to be around ten years of age. But the book is obviously planned and written to suit a child very much younger. A child of ten or eleven, under any intelligent system of schooling, is quite capable of assimilating much more material and in a much more mature way than this very elementary and very simple "baby-minded" primer.

Teachers Often Think Too Young

I have noticed this before about a certain type of schoolteacher, usually of the "progressive" sort. The material they deem suitable for their children is almost invariably three or four years below the capacity of the child when properly stimulated and disciplined. There is a certain kind of college teacher, as well, who really is thinking all the time in preparatory school terms and who wishes to use methods applicable to immature preparatory school boys and girls, instead of stretching the minds of those students up to what should be college capacity and achievement.

The error has flooded the publishing market with books which are almost an insult to the intelligence of children. First in the books of fancy and imagination, which, when compared with the great children's classics of the past, are intolerably feeble and fanciful and whimsical and picayune, and which, I have found, the normal child rejects in disgust.

The habit is creeping into the factual books, such as the above, which it is becoming the fashion to publish for children. If Mrs. Roosevelt's book were announced definitely for children of the elementary school age, six or seven, it would be admirable, I suspect, but if she has in mind children from nine to eleven, she is under-shooting her mark and falling short of the target. For the mental progress between the ages of seven and ten is enormous, if children are properly disciplined and taught that the acquisition of knowledge is hot a pleasant game but an important duty.

An excellent example of the kind of book written to appeal to and instruct children of the ages at which Mrs. Roosevelt is apparently aiming is Adele Gutman Nathan's little books dealing with the history of the locomotive and the wheat industry. Like Mrs. Roosevelt's book they are beautifully gotten up. Large pages, plenty of white space, beautiful typography and bookmaking and all those matters which make children's books so attractive nowadays.

Semi-Solids Not Needed for Young

In Mr. Roosevelt's books there are many pen and ink cartoons, reasonably well drawn, visualizing and dramatizing the abstractions which she, perforce, must write about. In Mrs. Nathan's two books there are a large number of superb photographic illustrations of engines and harvesting machinery, from the beginning of both industries to the present time. Mrs. Nathan's books by the way are titled "The Iron Horse" and "The Farmer Sows His Wheat," the latter, at least, published by Milton, Balch Co.

Mrs. Nathan is a well known director of industrial pageants and exhibits, She directed the great pageant of the locomotive at Baltimore a few years ago, celebrating the one hundreth anniversary of American railroading, and if I am not mistaken the present book is an outgrowth of "Romance of the Reaper," a film put out by the International Harvester Company for the celebration of its hundreth anniversary.

Mrs. Nathan's books are well within the scope of the ability and interest of a fairly young child, but, also, they contain much more information than Mrs. Roosevelt's little book and are written in a style which does not quite so deliberately play down to the understanding of an imaginary somewhat backward child. One of the reasons why people matured more rapidly and became more responsible earlier in life, back in the days of our grandparents, was that there were no children's books. Children had to read grown-up books . . . and did!

Just as our fashionable educated young mothers are still feeding their children cereal and scrambled eggs at an age when they want and need a mature and varied diet—in other words, meat!—so that class of mothers is responsible also for this intellectual spoon-feeding of their children. We need to get away from the semi-solids in education and literature, or the children of the future, particularly the well-to-do children for whom this $1.50 chap-book is designed, are going to have intellectual rickets.

WEDDED HER TO SELL AUTO, WIDOW SAYS

HUSBAND QUIT ON DAY AFTER THE SALE

Mrs. Kennedy Seeks Divorce, Baring a Deal That Mixed Matrimony With Business

So far as it developed in testimony, the new auto is still running, but Mr. Kennedy, who swapped his bachelor's estate for the old buggy and $140 cash, has ceased to function according to the bill of sale.

Mrs. Chloe Sanborn Kennedy, a buxom South Boston matron of 53, in Suffolk court today told Judge Poland all about it. Love, it [illegible] Mr. Kennedy, and he makes no attempt to go where Mrs. Kennedy waits without the chains that bind her.

"I met John Kennedy eight years ago in the company of my late husband. I always considered him to be an honest and truthful man," she said.

"About March 17 last he came to my home and asked for a $50 loan. He had a mortgage on his furniture and feared he would lose it. I loaned him the money with the understanding he would repay it in June.

BUY AND I'LL MARRY

"I later purchased a 1928 car from Mr. Kennedy and after that we went riding several times. During the rides we talked about the purchase of another car and I went to view it with Mr. Kennedy.

"Mr. Kennedy told me, 'If you will buy this car I will marry you.' I bought the car upon the strength of that promise. I said, 'I will marry you and buy the car.'

"There was $140 difference between my old car and the new one and on April 20 I bought the car. We were married April 21, 1932, by Rev. Louis West of South Boston.

"After we were married we went out for dinner and after dinner we drove through Boston, Revere and Nantasket. I talked about the furniture in my home that I would like to take to the new home, and Mr. Kennedy said we would decide that later.

ALL DONE, HE TOLD HER

"We returned to Boston and went to Mr. Kennedy's house, where we passed the night. (Mr. Kennedy, she said, was husband in title only.)

"The next morning I arose and started to get breakfast and Mr. Kennedy said he never ate until 9 o'clock. As it was about that then he started down to his garage and I went with him. I said, 'I will see you at noon.' I asked him what he'd prefer for dinner and he said, 'Anything you chose.' I said again that I'd see him at noon and he said, 'No, I'm all done.'

"I said, 'What do you mean?' and he said, 'All done with marriage.' I said, 'Will you please tell me why you married me, then?' and he said, 'To make the sale of the car.' I was so shocked I hardly knew where I was."

Mrs. Kennedy testified she sent the chauffeur to Kennedy several times to ask him to live with her, and the chauffeur testified he took a list of prepared questions to Kennedy to ask him. Among them was:

"Why did you refuse to carry out the responsibility of your married state?" and Kennedy's alleged answer was, "Because I sold the car."

FRAT STUNT DRAWS SCREAMS IN WELLESLEY

300 Girl Students Alarmed Until They Learn Scantily Clad Boys Are Only Initiating

Wellesley College girls were so upset, judging by the rapidity with which shrill voices on the phone demanded the assistance of the Wellesley police today, that officers thought there must be at least half-a-dozen mice loose on the campus.

But it was only four Tech students.

Ready to do battle to mice or men in defense of the fair maidens Timmins and Crosswell rushed into action.

Officers took the four youths to the station. There, the half-clad student gave his name as John Eakin, of Memorial Drive, Cambridge.

His companions, Joseph M. Smith, Russell McDonald and Herbert M. Goodwin, all of the same address, and all Tech students, said the stunt which caused the uproar among the girls was just a part of Eakin's initiation into the Beta Kappa Epsilon fraternity. All were released.

LISPING BANDIT IN NICE HOLDUP

It's hard for Harold King of Fleet st., Lynn, manager of a chain store in Massachusetts ave., Cambridge, to be very angry with the holdup man who took $41 from him at gunpoint this morning.

The fellow was so nice about it. He even lisped his demand to "Thick 'em up!" When he shoved the loot in his pocket he walked calmly out of the store, lit a cigarette and walked leisurely along Massachusetts ave. toward a subway entrance.

According to King, the man entered the store shortly after it opened. Charles Hollis, 14, who lives near, had dropped in. Then the lisping bandit walked in.

He flashed a gun, lisped out his demands in the nicest possible manner, and then ordered King and Hollis to give him a three-minute start.

Hollis missed a chance to become a hero by turning left instead of right in looking for an officer. Had he just looked around the corner he would have seen Officer Richard Aylward directing traffic. But he ran the other way, where there didn't happen to be any officers. When he did find one, the lisping bandit had disappeared.

Treasurer Hurley Is Ill in Hospital

State Treasurer Charles F. Hurley's absence from the Democratic rally at the Arena last night was explained today when it was revealed that he is a patient at the Wyman House of the Cambridge Hospital suffering from a mild attack of laryngitis. Physicians stated today that he will be discharged Sunday if his condition warrants.

Boston Missionary Escapes

Foochow, China, Oct. 28 (AP)—Miss Leona Burr, a Congregationalist missionary, assigned from Boston, arrived here today in a motorboat with two other missionaries after a nerve-wracking trip of 200 miles to escape a horde of Chinese Communist bandits.

Burglars Go to Shoe Store for Pants

Two holdup men who used a taxicab to make their getaway, robbed Maxwell C. Bassen of Roxanna st., Mattapan, manager of a shoe store at 1504 Dorchester ave., Dorchester, of $24 and several boxes of socks. Then to complete the job they took Bassen's trousers.

The bandits stepped into the taxi and ordered the driver, who was unaware of their identity or the holdup, to drive away.

Robert J. Burnett, of Pope Hill, Dorchester, driver of the taxi, told police the pair ordered him to drive to the Strandway in South Boston. When they reached Columbus park near the Carson Beach bath house they ordered him to stop. They paid the $1.20 fare and gave him a 30 cent tip.

Farnsworth Fortune Goes to Daughter

The entire estate of William Farnsworth of Dedham, wealthy wool merchant with an office at 268 Summer st., who died Wednesday, is left to his daughter, Mrs. Ellen F. Loomis of Tuxedo Park, N. Y., it was revealed today when his will was filed in Dedham probate court.

The New England Trust Co. of Boston and the son-in-law, Alfred L. Loomis, are named trustees under the will, with Charles K. Cobb of Brookline, executor.

ADVERTISING CODE SENT OUT

The standard code of advertising ethics, adopted by the National Retail Dry Goods Association, has been approved by the board of directors and is being distributed to stores throughout the country today.

Among those prominent in promoting the observance of these standards, which seek "strict honesty in all advertising," is P. A. O'Connell, president of the association and head of the E. T. Slattery Co. of Boston.

O'Connell is being assisted locally by D. E. Moeser of Conrad & Co., H. F. Twomey of Jordan Marsh Co. and L. S. Bitner of William Filene's Sons Co.

6 CAPTURED IN SAUGUS RAID

Because the automobile of Mo[illegible] Pearl, orchestra leader, was stolen last night Saugus police captured six men in a liquor raid in Saugus early today after the alleged auto thief had been arrested in Lily Pond where he had taken refuge for nearly three hours.

The stolen car was sighted on Newburyport turnpike and was chased until it crashed into a wall. The driver, listed by police as Walter E. Lacey, 19, of Charlestown, plunged into the pond and defied capture until more police arrived.

Meantime, Patrolman Joseph J. Lambert of Saugus saw a truck go into the yard of J. Frank Newhall of Broadway. On suspicion Lambert obtained a warrant and a raid was staged, 70 cases of liquor being found in the truck.

In the house police arrested Newhall, James J. Reid, 32, of Shore st.; Spencer, the truck driver; Joseph J. McCarthy, 31, of Washington st., Lynn; Harold J. Smith, [illegible], of Marshall st., Gloucester; Robert L. King of Washington st., Brookline, and William J. Maxwell Jr. of Main st., Wakefield.

All were charged with keeping and exposing liquor, but when Reid, in Saugus court, admitted owner-

Playful Toto Makes Bore Quit Camp After Destroying Book

Weren't there some other means of dampening Kinkley's enthusiasm? Surely there must be some way. Another idea came to me. Did he know that I was in the habit of coming and going at the weirdest hours, that this unfortunate habit was part and parcel of the business I was in?

That was perfectly all right, he declared blandly. He was sure I would not disturb him.

We made our way off the porch onto the spacious lawn. He was jaunty, I depressed. As we stood there, Kinkley facing the animal sheds, piped up buoyantly, "I suppose that's where you keep your animals."

TOTO'S NEW TOY

I nodded. As he spoke I could see Toto shuffling up the front steps of the house. I watched him as he reached the porch and began scrutinizing Kinkley's briefcase. A sudden hope sprang up in my breast as Toto moved over to investigate this new plaything he had found. Kinkley's back was toward the porch as he made some patronizing remarks about my animals.

I watched Toto poke at the diplomat's briefcase with one paw and then the other. If I could get Kinkley away for half an hour Toto might do something to annoy him out of wanting to live here!

I suggested that we look over the animals and he assented.

TEARS UP BOOK.

Toto did not disappoint me. In fact he so far outdid my wildest expectation that I could only gasp as Kinkley and I returned arm in arm from our half hour in the compound. As we rounded the corner of the house the broad front lawn caught my eye. It looked as if a sudden snowstorm had fallen.

Kinkley paused in the middle of a long sentence about the pleasure which was in store for me when he began reading me the recently completed chapters of his memoirs dealing with the climate and natural history of Aden and Addis Ababa.

KINKLEY'S THREATS

"My book! My book!" he finally gasped, still too stunned to move from the place where he stood.

It was a chance I [illegible]. I always felt bad when [illegible] brief case got itself all chewed up on my premises, especially one full of memoirs.

Kinkley thought that over for a time while we all continued to pick up the scribbled foolscap pages from bush and scrub.

"Well," he said, finally, with splendid repression, "this settles any chance you ever had, Buck, of getting me to live with you out here."

"I glanced up at him. "I'm sorry," I said. "But of course, I understand and won't insist."

Joe Winter was the manager of a big rubber plantation [illegible] miles north of Singapore. I had recently made a minor contribution to [illegible] an Airedale I had brought from America and I was almost embarrassingly grateful.

Joe over a gin sling was accusing me of being inhospitable or inhuman or the like. Or both. He was pointing out that seven weeks had elapsed since I had visited him at the plantation.

But a chap has no right neglecting his business, and I didn't see the wisdom of taking advantage of the fact that his company was clearing off another thousand acres to be planted in rubber trees.

"I didn't know you had that job under way," I spoke up.

"Come up with your boys for a week, Frank, and if you don't get some wonderful specimens it's your own fault."

Girl About Town

—By ALYCE SIEMENS—

One of the Real Old Ones!

(Can you hark back to any old songs that go back even farther than this one contributed from a Brightonite?)

One stormy night in winter,
  When the wind was cold and wet,
I heard sweet strains of music,
  That I never shall forget.
I was seated in the cabin,
  With my Mary, fair and young,
When a face looked in the window,
  And a band of singers sung.
"We are coming, Sister Mary,
Be you ready, Sister Mary,

Harking Back:

Frederick L. Cheever of Wollaston writes us and wonders how [illegible] remember [illegible] in 78 . . . In the old Boston Music Hall, now the Orpheum, when a dirigible flying machine, one man power first made its appearance here . . . With monstrous pedals and hands . . . It flew about the hall from the platform to balconies and back to the stage . . . Also took the place of the usual Fourth of July balloon ascension in the Common . . . But landed in distress a short distance away because it could only just clear the tree-tops on Charles street . . . That was high flyin' in those days, too . . . Mr. Cheever reminds too about the phonograph display that amazed . . . During the same year . . . At Horticultural hall on Tremont and Bromfield streets . . . When they used the tin foil recorder, with the singer talking into the horn . . . With the records turning out "rather thin in volume but easily understood" . . . Our writer recalls the Phillips school on the Hill . . . In 1875-1879 when those fine political groups held sway there with members such as Eddie Donovan, "Shush" Kelliher, C. L. Burrill and the Lomasneys . . . And the Boylston Museum, with a 10-cent admission to see Mr. and Mrs. Jerry Cohan in "The Molly Maguires" . . . The female minstrels there . . . And when "hurry ups" were the front platforms of the horse cars . . .

A Real Old-Timer

Is miracle lady Annie Hart . . . The 73-year-old trouper in "Show Boat," now at the Shubert . . . Annie takes the part of the boarding housekeeper . . . And she was born in Lawrence, Mass., in 1859 . . . But lived many of her tiny-tot years on Federal st., right here in South Boston . . . She has been a trouper behind the footlights for 59 years! . . . And ALWAYS a trouper . . . In going-throughness and heart as well! . . . She began by "carrying a spear"—as a chorus gal would put it in the old days—in the famous "Black Crook" show . . . In Niblo's Garden in New York . . . Her biggest success was as Mrs. O'Dare in "Irene" . . . But everyone in show business somehow always thinks of Annie's singing "The Hat Me Father Wore," which was as much a part of Annie Hart's personality as "Moanin' Low" has been a part of Libby Holman's . . . She has been with the "Show Boat" company since 1927 . . . And has never missed a performance or a single rehearsal! . . . She's the most remarkable looking person we've seen in all our snoopings about . . . Her kindly eyes are never still . . . With plenty of mischief in them! . . . And lots of delightful Irish humor at her command constantly . . . And her steely-gray hair, with its modern marcel, is amazing for her age . . . To say nothing of her up-to-the-minute crimson-hued finger nails! . . . Harking Back fans should really take a trip to the Shubert to see Annie . . . She's a dear to every member of the company, too . . . At her last birthday party, 15 members of the company gave her a gold good-luck bracelet with a tiny gold heart on it from each of them . . .

About Towning:

Wonder if they finally found out just how old Cambridge's Neal Linehan was when he celebrated his birthday last Sunday . . . The discoverer of Bibber McCoy is busy secretly so, working out a new idea in sports . . . We must snoop some afternoon at the Arena and find out what it's all about . . . Dorchester's Joseph Kruger and Irene Herman, of Brookline, are in the engagement days stage now . . . Mrs. Gaspar Bacon likes tagging after Gaspar at his rallies and is practising the economy he is practising in his campaign . . . They've given up their string of horses . . . Closed their stables and are living in half a house! . . . You'll be surprised when you hear of the plans now in the making, to erect a huge building which will seat 6000 people who will want to watch the Boston marathon when it opens . . . In middle of December on one of the parking spaces near Tremont and Stuart streets . . . Sharing profits with the unemployed of Boston . . .

The huge solitaire on Pat Henry's correct finger and all didn't seem to discourage Stan Myers, the new R-K-O Boston's music maestro's dancing attendance on the smartly costumed Pat at the backstage Keith party Wednesday midnight! . . . Must be his dimples! . . . Arthur Loew talked with the glorious Helen Morgan from half way around the world last Wed. . . . He long distanced her from Batavia, Java . . . Wired her Tuesday from Shanghai . . . An' will be back to bask in her winsome smiles two weeks before Christmas . . .

There are some local headwaiters who would do well to take lessons from the Cascades George Bowden . . .

AIDED YOUTH UNWITTINGLY, POLICE SAY

Didn't Know Her Companion, Held in Heavy Bail, Had Just Held Up Waltham Place

A pretty Jamaica Plain girl who declared she unwittingly drove a bandit on a Waltham job, was captured early today in Waltham within an hour after her companion, Albert R. Malloy, 22, of Prospect st., Waltham, is alleged to have robbed a store near his home.

The girl, Miss Olive Daman, 23 [illegible] Plain, was [illegible] st near a stolen coupe which she had driven away from the fruit store of Hagop Ataman, 25, at 797 Main st. Waltham.

Several shots had been fired by police in pursuit of the car less than half an hour earlier, but her companion, she declared in court, told her not to mind the sounds, as they might be held up.

In Waltham court the girl, after nearly collapsing, was held in $50 bonds as a material witness, the charge of robbery while armed against her being dropped.

Malloy was held in $10,000 on charges of robbery while armed and theft of the automobile in which they rode. He admitted, police testified, that he had stolen the car in Waltham before he met the girl and had taken her to a "beer joint" in Peterboro st., Boston.

According to the girl, Malloy told her to stop near the store because he wanted to get a drink and told her to leave the motor running because he would be right out.

In the store he is alleged to have forced Ataman to surrender a bag containing $17 in change. This money, with the girl's hat and pocketbook, were found in the car.

'DOING GOOD JOB?' 'SURE,' SAYS ROBBER

ALBERT ROSETTI SERGT. CHARLES MICHAEL J. DALEY

"What are you doing there? Are you doing a good job?" called Michael J. Daley, who lives over a store at 313 Elm st., Everett, when he heard glass crash below. "Sure" came the reply from a youth of about 15, "and we'll be back," he said. "Hurry up, hurry up. Is the cop coming yet?" said another voice. The youth emerged from the store, piled into a car and fled. Above is Daley and Sergt. William F. Charles with Albert Rosetti of Chelsea, held suspect in a series of 11 breaks.

DOUBTS TUNNEL USED MUCH

Do pedestrians enjoy dodging death or disability? Ambrose Rourke, Boston street commissioner, is afraid they do, and started today to gather facts and figures to prove it.

When the traffic circle at Charles and Cambridge sts. was built tunnels for pedestrians were provided to allow them to move from one side of Cambridge st. to the other without the danger of being whisked into the nearby morgue. But they still retain their sporting instinct and plunge into the stream of traffic.

A census will be taken to determine how many pedestrians use the tunnel, with a view to starting a campaign to enlighten them on the benefits of underground travel.

No Horse Play for Traffic Officer

A nervous horse and a nervous traffic officer created a traffic jam in School and Province sts. today, while a crowd of amused spectators offered plenty of advice but no aid.

The horse, attached to a laundry wagon, was strolling through Province st. while the driver was making deliveries. When a traffic officer sighted the animal, he seized the bridle.

This was a surprise to the horse who then surprised the officer by laying back long ears, and lashing out with forelegs.

EDUCATORS TO BATTLE CUTS

Concerted action by Massachusetts school teachers to prevent unreasonable cutting of educational programs of public schools was urged today at a meeting of Middlesex County Teachers Association in the State House.

Adelbert L. Safford, Reading superintendent of schools, urged establishment of local teachers associations to study the problems of budget cutting. He promised the assistance of the state teachers organization toward that end.

"We must co-operate to oppose enactment of reactionary legislation, especially that which would interfere with the present independent functions of local school committees," said Safford.

[illegible] colder tonight and tomorrow will be a fine day to wear a raccoon coat to the football game, according to the weather man.

Nearly an inch of rain fell yesterday. The [illegible] damage, and slippery pavements, covered with leaves, caused several minor automobile accidents.

TWO UNDEFEATED TEAMS SURE TO CRASH

FANNING

With GEORGE UNDERWOOD

King of the Gridiron. Game's Greatest Back. C'mon Now, Who Is He?

Crowned by Experts and Public Greatest of Great

HEIGH HO! IT'S GREAT to be alive and a football fan! What Cobb is to Bates & Yerza and Jordan is to Marsh, football is to us. Darlints! And what a lovely, perfectly lovely afternoon we're going to have tomorrow with the Big Brown Bear tackling Harvard and the boys of old B. C. lining up to repel the Maroon cohorts of Old Cav. With Dartmouth out to bust its ancient jinx of never licking the Bulldog in the Bowl; recently come-to-life Navy tackling powerful Pennsy; rejuvenated Princeton playing inspired Michigan; Pitt entertaining the Fighting Irish of Notre Dame, there's plenty to mull about. But we beg of you, in licking your lips over tomorrow's football menu, don't—don't we beg of you—overlook the big treat that is in store for the New England fans at Braves Field, next Sunday. Red Grange! Red Grange, that's all! The Galloping Ghost! There he is in the backfield of the Chicago Bears, all set to come knifing, corkscrewing, swooping, will-o'-the-wisping through the best laid defense Lud Wray has conceived for our Braves. Others may sing of Harvard-Brown, B. C.-Fordham, and other of tomorrow's football fracases, but we're going to rise on our hind legs and smite a lyre for Red Grange, the greatest football back of all time!

IN THE LAST All-American team picked by the late Walter Camp before the death of the Dean of Football, in 1925, Red Grange was one of Camp's backs. Grantland Rice, who carried on for Camp, picked Grange as his All-American back the next two years running. Christy Walsh's All-American Board of Football Control, which, when Grange was at Illinois, was made up of the late Knute Rockne, the late Bill Alexander and Tad Jones and Pop Warner, named Grange as No. 1 halfback. Looking back on 40 years of active football, Big Bill Edwards, Princeton captain hailed Grange as the greatest halfback he ever had seen. Going back over almost as great a span of the years, Johnny Heisman named Grange and Mahan as his two All-Time All-American backs. Incidentally, Heisman picked our own Huntington "Tack" Hardwick as one of his All-Time All-American ends. But now we're straying away from the Grange. Back to the Galloping Ghost. The late Knute Rockne said the two greatest backs he ever had seen in moleskins were George Gipp and Red Grange. The Galloping Ghost, once again! That about makes it unanimous.

IF RED GRANGE had all the leading football experts yodeling of his greatness, imagine what a hold the Galloping Ghost got on the general football public! The Red Flame of the Illini hammered and sliced and corkscrewed and will-o-the-wisp whisked his way into the hearts of all the fans fortunate enough to see him play. Those who did not see him in action were captivated by the reams of stuff printed about him. He reeked with color.

BARRY WOOD, HARVARD'S 10-letter man, in his recently published, "What Price Football"—and if you haven't read Barry's opus you'll find it well worth the reading, one of the best football books we have ever had the privilege to scan—borrows from Allen's "Only Yesterday," two months from the life of Red Grange, as told in brief newspaper telegraphic dispatches. Here they are

Nov. 2—Grange is carried two miles by students
Nov. 3—His football jersey will be framed at Illinois
Nov. 11—Admirers circulate petition nominating him for Congress despite his being under age. Is silent on $10,000 offer from New York Giants for three games
Nov. 17—Is offered $120,000 a year by a real estate firm
Nov. 21—Plays last game with Illinois, turns professional
Nov. 22—Signs with Chicago Bears
Nov. 26—Plays first professional game with Bears and collects $12,000
Dec. 6—Collects $30,000 in first New York game
Dec. 7—Signs $300,000 movie contract with Arrow Picture Corporation. May earn $100,000 by June
Dec. 8—Is presented to President Coolidge

FAME IS A HARD horse to ride. It has thrown many great and able men. Success went to Red Grange's head. He took the bits in his teeth and ran away with himself. The end of the rainbow found the Galloping Ghost, fortune dissipated, fair weather friends flown, an entertainer and a "Come On" in a cabaret! The real test of a man is when he is on the ropes. Being knocked down doesn't count. It's whether you get up. Red Grange got up. He conquered himself. He marched up through the gloomy valley on to the shining heights again. He said goodby to the movies, the false and the tinsel and went back to his old love, football.

AND THE THOUSANDS who will flock to Braves Field next Sunday will see Red Grange, the Galloping Ghost himself, bigger, better, faster, more elusive, brilliant than ever. Big league football, its superior caliber, its changed type of play, does not give Grange the chance to shine as spectacularly as he did when playing college football for Illinois. Red himself says he never knew anything of the real science of football until he got a taste of big league warfare. But Red still is the terror of the opposing defense. His brother players, and don't forget that the big league teams are comprised of All-American timber and made up of the greatest players in the land, say that Red Grange still is the greatest halfback they ever saw, or ever hope to see.

CHAPTER XI

The referee was knocked cuckoo. The crowd was milling with excitement, and it looked to me very likely that our purse, that had already shrunk badly during the evening, would evaporate completely.

So, while the referee was supporting himself on one elbow on the turf and Tommy—alias Jack Welsh—was picking himself up, with blood streaming from a cut on his lip, and the crowd in a frenzy of excitement, I walked over to the timekeeper, who also held the purse.

The money was tied in a handkerchief and, as I peeled the gloves from my bandaged hands I glared at the timekeeper and purseholder and said, "Give it to me!"

Not only did he hand me the purse, from which almost $100 had leaked, but also a very fine split-second watch with a chain on it. No owner appeared to claim the watch and a few weeks later I pawned it in Washington for $25.

Washington was the goal of Tommy and myself and we

After [illegible] 60 minutes [illegible] Saturday and safely coming through two long scrimmages during the early part of the week, Harlow suffered a recurrence of body injuries yesterday, which may keep him out of the West Point game as well as rendering him a non-combatant tomorrow.

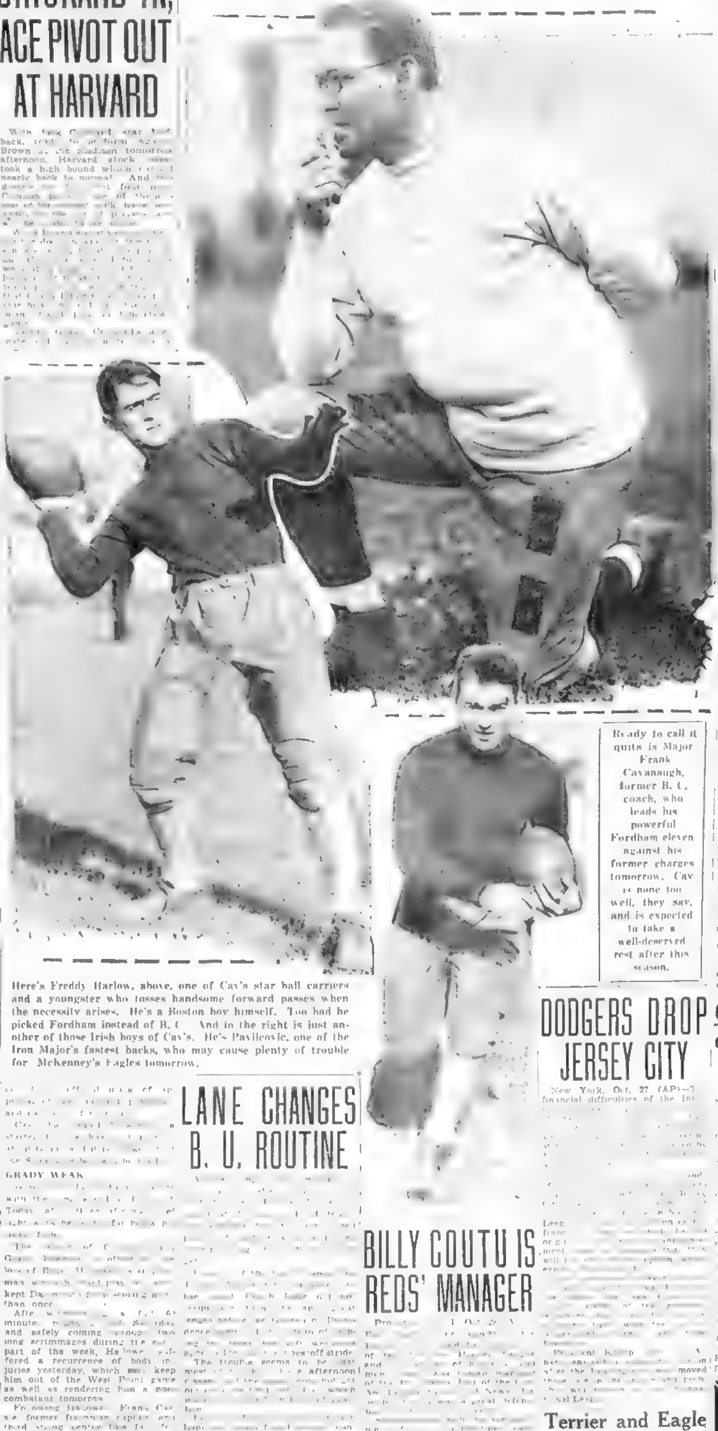
This week of intense work, however, has put the Crimson in much better condition to stop its opponents' attack than it has been all season.

THE IRON MAJOR'S LAST CHARGE



Ready to call it quits is Major Frank Cavanaugh, former B. C. coach, who leads his powerful Fordham eleven against his former charges tomorrow. Cav is none too well, they say, and is expected to take a well-deserved rest after this season.

Here's Freddy Harlow, above, one of Cav's star ball carriers and a youngster who tosses handsome forward passes when the necessity arises. He's a Boston boy himself. Too had he picked Fordham instead of B. C. And in the right is just another of those Irish boys of Cav's. He's Pavilcovic, one of the Iron Major's fastest backs, who may cause plenty of trouble for Mckenney's Eagles tomorrow.

N. Y. [illegible] off color against Army [illegible] and if the Violet [illegible] Boilermakers, they will [illegible] in Gotham.

Dartmouth will be down in New Haven trying to put across its first victory over the Elis. The Big Green has never measured up to form in the Yale Bowl but on paper they should win tomorrow.

EAGLES HAVE CHANCE

Although Fordham appears to be too strong for Boston College, the game at University Heights will be well worth witnessing.

Last week Colby and Maine tossed a monkey wrench in the works of the Maine State series by defeating Bowdoin and Bates, respectively, both of which were heavily favored to win. Colby and Maine will collide in Orono tomorrow afternoon and the outcome of that game will go a long ways toward deciding the championship. While Coaches Brice and Roudy are trying to out-general each other in Orono, Dave Morey will be attempting to outsmart Charlie Bowser while Bates and Bowdoin are fighting to regain lost prestige in Lewiston.

Amherst and Mass State is the big attraction in the Western part of the state. If the Lord Jeffs manage to bottle up Lewis Bush, the high scoring State back, they may wipe out some of the sting of last year's 13 to 12 defeat.

Fish 'n Game

By WIN BROOKS

H. Weimer Haynes of Dedham is a good wing shot but there are times when you've got to be more than a good wing shot to get birds.

Haynes was walking around the shore of Wigwam pond, Dedham, the other afternoon hoping to pick up a pheasant. He carried a 20 gauge gun loaded with No. 8 shot. And over his head so close he could almost reach up and pluck the tail feathers, flew 31 Canada geese. He gave them both barrels of the light load and they kept on going.

• • •

There is still considerable heavy foliage in many sections of the state, but the best game conditions in a good many years are reported, in fact reports to date indicate the best upland game bird shooting in a decade although this sentiment may result in part from the lifting of the ban on hen pheasants. Grouse, however, are said to be very plentiful and along the line of their migration the woodcock are affording excellent sport.

• • •

DESPITE THE early season there are many geese and ducks. Hayden Brown, of Haverhill, gunning at Newburyport, had 14 black ducks in the bag before 8 o'clock the other morning. At the Ashley camp, the stand run by a son of Mayor Ashley in Bedford, 17 ducks and 7 geese were killed on the opening day.

Fred Murkland called me the other day to relate the difficulty he had in finding any soft shot among the stocks of Boston stores. I find it is still carried by several stores, however, but never sold unless specified by the customer. There are, apparently, only a few sportsmen who still hold that soft shot is preferable to chilled for use on the smaller game birds such as quail and woodcock. These few, however, claim that a single soft pellet flattening out like a bird where a chilled shot may only partially disable it. The superiority of the chilled shot for use on ducks and geese where the shot must penetrate compact, heavy featherage is universally admitted.

The Westfield River Sportsmen's Association is planning a bear-steak dinner at Huntington on Nov. 8, the night of the first day of the annual foxhunt of the Westfield Rod and Gun Club. The East Longmeadow Rod and Gun Club will join the party.

So What?

By JOE MOONEY

The boy editors are a suspicious lot. They can't see how a hidden ball play can be on the level.

The college paper has a ringer on the staff, too. How about the reporter who cross-examined the halfback: "Usen't youse play for the Stapletons?"

You can't fool college paper heavyweights. When a sub hands a slip of paper to the referee they know it's either a waiver or a contract.

EVERETT IN BIG TEST AT N. H.

By BILL CONNELL

Four of the unbeaten teams today may be enjoying their winning records for the last time this fall. Three of these, Brockton, Haverhill and Leominster are slight favorites in the Saturday scraps while one, Everett, is on the short end of the odds.

Malden, high near top strength for the first time since the opening of the grid parade, rides to Brockton for the highlight encounter of the day. Unbeaten and untied Brockton is a one touchdown favorite with [illegible] Johnny [illegible] halfback giving the Shoe City eleven its advantage.

EVERETT MAY FALL

Everett is apt to fall from the unbeaten class when it goes to Manchester, N. H. Manchester's backfield [illegible] a grinding gaining affair with the strong Manchester [illegible] back the foe.

Everett has been tied twice. The line is heavy with capable end Capt. Ado Commett[illegible] who probably is the fastest school [illegible] and [illegible] give Everett backfield power.

Haverhill [illegible] the choice over Lowell. Capt. Nick Carif[illegible] left end and Walter Gable, halfback, have been sparkling for Haverhill all season and their work with the others is due to keep the team unbeaten. But not by a big margin.

BELMONT HAS EDGE

Danvers [illegible] Ipswich and [illegible] Belmont has an edge on Winchester.

Newton, one of the finest teams of Greater Boston though it lost one game, expects a breather in the visit of Melrose.

[illegible] Watertown [illegible] both Waltham [illegible] Coach Edwin Ward of Watertown said [illegible] this week [illegible]

Brockton 8, Malden 6.
Manchester, N. H. 13, Everett 6.
Newton 20, Melrose 0.
Leominster 11, Framingham 0.
Beverly 13, Lynn English 0.
Salem 7, Peabody 0.
Lawrence 27, St. James 0.
Lynn Classical [illegible], Quincy 1[illegible].
Belmont [illegible], Winchester 0.
River[illegible] 7, Rindge Tech 0.
Danvers [illegible], Ipswich 0.

COMETS OF SCHOOL GRID WORLD

NINE SCHOOL GAMES TODAY

Also there is a Boston school doubleheader slated at Fenway Park, giving school fans a fine Friday program, with the few other games carded.

Cambridge Latin is favored in the battle at Brookline.

The Boston twin bill has two excellent games carded. If the wet weather lets up and permits the teams to play, the coaches and schedule makers of Fred O'Brien will be [illegible]

Wrestling Last Night

By the Associated Press
Harrisburg, Pa.—Jim Londos, [illegible] Greece, threw Herman Hickman, 240, Tennessee, [illegible]

MR. BOSTON

By JACK CONWAY

THE POLITICAL orators have even stepped in on the noble old wrestling game. And so there won't be any broadcast of the Nick Lutze-"Gentleman" Jack Washburn finish wrestling bout at the Boston Garden on next Tuesday night.

All the air lines are engaged for the time when Lutze and Washburn will be doing their stuff. The promoters say they regret the fact. Probably being all upset because with no broadcast the crowd will be larger.

Mr. Boston

Wounded veterans at local hospitals as usual have been invited to attend the show as the guests of the management. The wrestling promoters have been very thoughtful of the boys who did their stuff over there where no holds were barred. In addition to staging numerous benefit shows for them, they have usually admitted them to their shows as guests of the management.

Paul Bowser has hired a special squad of police to take charge of matters around the ring. Apparently Paul feels that Lutze and Washburn won't be as careful as following the rules as he would like them to be. Under modern wrestling about everything goes with the exception of kneeing and kicking.

• • •

DeGlane to Remain Here

YOU CAN WRITE to your aunt out on the farm that Henri DeGlane won't return to France this year. It was the Frenchman's intention to sail for home this month. Paul Bowser induced Henri to remain here to meet the winner of the Lutze-Washburn bout.

It is likely that the champion will not leave for France until early next year. He says he will still be champion when he sees Paris again.

• • •

Frenchman Has Courage

I LIKE DeGLANE'S attitude in meeting all-comers. Unlike most of the foreign titleholders, DeGlane never refuses to put his title on the line. He is willing to shoot it out with any of them.

The fact DeGlane has been wrestling since he was 16 years of age, which is some 16 years ago, is one of the reasons he feels he can lick anybody. He has always been a fine student of wrestling. More important, he possesses patience. This is an asset which all wrestling champions must possess. The high-strung, temperamental grappler is always pulled into a trap by a patient mat star.

I once asked Joe Stecher why Ed (Strangler) Lewis was so successful.

"I have wrestled Lewis many times, and so know why he wins," said Stecher. "It is the champion's patience that keeps him at the top. When on the mat, he will talk a great deal, and bluff you as much as he can, but he is always patient. He will wait for two or three hours, if necessary, before he makes the move that he feels will gain for him the victory.

"Lewis and myself once wrestled five hours to a draw in Kansas City. I never saw anybody who possessed as much patience as Lewis."

Carnera to Fight Kennedy for Argonne

Primo Carnera, Italian heavyweight, has been signed to meet Les Kennedy of California in 10-round bout at an Argonne A. A. show at the Arena on next Friday night.

Kennedy was carded to meet Walter Cobb here last Summer, but was injured a few days before the bout. Unknown Winston was substituted for Kennedy and knocked Cobb out in two rounds.

HAUSER TAKES ON NICHOLS AT ARENA

Nichols!

That was the answer of the magic coin when Jack Conway flipped it to decide on the winner of the main bout of Eddie Mack's Argonne A. A. show at the Arena tonight.

If Heuser should get the duke, Jack will get himself a new coin, but he feels certain the magic piece will stage a real comeback after its flop on the Winston-Schaaf go.

By JACK CONWAY

If the youthful Adolph Heuser of Germany happens to lick George Nichols of Buffalo in their ten-round bout at an Argonne A. A. show at the Arena tonight you will find Eddie Mack signing Adolph to meet Maxie Rosenbloom in a bout for the light heavyweight championship of the world.

Rosenbloom asks the modest guarantee of $10,000 and a 37½ per cent privilege for a title defense contest. This is a low price for a championship tussle. The Boston Garden thought it was getting a little bargain a year ago when it got Young Jack Thompson to risk his welterweight crown against Lou Brouillard for $25,000.

Yet I don't suppose even $10,000 is to be considered lightly in these days when millions of respectable citizens are wondering how they are going to get the necessary food, clothing and fuel to get through the coming winter.

The light heavyweight division was at its peak when Jack Delaney took a shot at Paul Berlenbach's championship under the direction of Humbert J. Fugazy in Brooklyn in the summer of 1926. That show drew $430,000 and would have done better if Fugazy had a bigger arena.

Tommy Loughran was the last light heavyweight champion to get what the boys call respectable dough. He picked up $50,000 for his title defense go with Jimmy Braddock.

LOUGHRAN VACATED TITLE

Loughran vacated his championship to invade the heavyweight division and get knocked out by Jack Sharkey in three rounds. Since Loughran started chasing heavyweights the light heavyweight division has been tossed around quite a bit.

Rosenbloom won the recognition of the New York Boxing Commission, while the National Boxing Association decided that Nichols was the head man of this class. Maxie and Nichols battled last summer in Buffalo and Rosenbloom ended up with a close decision. Which makes Maxie the undisputed champion.

Unlike the average title-holder, Rosenbloom keeps hopping around the country. He will take on anybody who cares to meet him from 170 pounds up. Doing most of his training in night clubs, Maxie still manages to turn back the opposition.

Dorchester Eleven Meets Norcross C. C.

The St. Ambrose C. C. of Dorchester will play the Norcross C. C. of South Boston, Sunday, at the Dorchester town field. The Norcross Club have one of the fastest teams in the state.

RIDES BLIND BAGGAGE WITH THE TRUNK

planned to buy one ticket and check our trunk and both ride the cushions, as usual. The trunk was the first I ever owned and in it were all our belongings including our ring equipment.

As we were departing from Wheeling, W. Va., a citizen of Moundsville convinced me that there was money to be made by giving an exhibition in that town. He had seen our fight and wanted to see more. So we stopped in Moundsville, went to a hotel and paid $20 for the rental of the hall and had some bills printed.

In those days there was a real distinction between a fight and an exhibition. Ours was to be an exhibition. We were our own managers, ticket takers and announcers. I took my place in the box office, prepared for a rush. The first comers were about 20 baseball players in uniform. They demanded professional recognition and free passes to our show. I made the grave error of saying no to them.

The ball players started a vigorous propaganda against our show. Our gross for the performance was $16. We ducked out of the back of the hall and sneaked to our hotel after refunding the $16 to our patrons.

The bankroll now looked pretty puny. We decided to jump our hotel bill. Further we decided to perform a feat in hoboing—to ride a blind baggage carrying a trunk.

Hop to Washington

In the dead of night we lowered our satchels and our trunk from the window of the hotel and each holding a handle, we dog-trotted down the railroad tracks. A mile or so out of town was a water tank stop and there we awaited a train headed for Washington. We swung up onto the narrow ledge at the end of a baggage car clinging to our trunk, our derbies and at the same time holding on to the end of the car. It was a stunt for two young fighters in perfect trim. A few years later, when I was champion I was given the choice of squaring that hotel bill or going to jail.

Tommy and I, playing hide-and-seek with the conductor got to Washington.

Promptly I challenged Billy McMillan, welterweight champion but he very logically demanded to know who I was outside of being the self-appointed champion of Ohio, Indiana and Kentucky. I soaked the watch for $20, got $10 in a pickup fight and headed for New York.

In 1893 and 1894 the records show that I fought at least once a month and the scenes of my bouts ranged from Hot Springs, Ark., to St. Paul, Minn. I lost none of these contests. And I never a cent of taxes [illegible] I pay.

In Cincinnati, Pretty Frank Kelly introduced me to Shadow Maber, welterweight champion of Australia. [illegible] was the day of my first fight at the Highland House, near Cincinnati, with Al Roberts, a local heavyweight. I got a draw in 10 rounds and later on knocked out Roberts in five rounds.

CAVANAUGH BRINGS LAST ELEVEN TO BOSTON

RAMS WORK OUT ON B. C. GRID TODAY

Maj. Frank Cavanaugh brought his battering Rams of Fordham University to Boston this morning for the last time. At Alumni Field Newton tomorrow, he'll start his final eleven against that of Boston College, coached by his former pupil, Joe McKenney.

The Major who is retiring because of ill health, brought, among others 28 local boys, all of whom were stars a few years back in Greater Boston high and prep schools.

His two signal callers are Freddy Harlow and Frankie McDermott. McDermott is the son of a former athletic star at Boston College, and is a product of Charlestown high and St John's Prep. His understudy Freddy Harlow, prepared at Cambridge Latin and Hebron Academy where he stood out in hockey and baseball as well as football.

PRACTICE AT HEIGHTS

The two Fordham elevens of equal strength "Cav" claims to have go to University Heights this afternoon to go through a stiff signal drill on the greensward that saw him rise to national prominence as the Eagles grid mentor a dozen years ago.

After the Fordham practice Joe McKenney will give his Eagles their final drill and one which promises to be just as stiff as those he has been giving all week.

O'Lalor is a product of the former Eagle mentor, Dr. Leo Daley who taught the Eagles the rudiments of the game at English high. He is the best guard that McKenney has on the defense and has won his position after a comeback from an injured shoulder which kept him out of last year's campaign.

[illegible] has been on the shelf most of [illegible] with his arm. He is one of the fastest men on the squad and the best all round end at the Heights. Frank Tosi will be his wing mate.

Kiliea will have as his substitute another newcomer Stan Jundzil who came along in great shape during the past two weeks. Jundzil has forced Paul Donahue out of the picture and will see considerable service against Fordham.

DOUGAN HOLDS BERTH

The pivot position which has been weak since Gregory Sullivan was injured in the Centre game has been brought up to standard with the appearance of Lou Musco as a replacement for Zan Romano the first string center. Musco is another Daley product who has played fullback and is a tower on the defense.

Johnny Dougan the speedy halfback has held onto his job despite the fine work shown by Tom Blase and Bob Curtin. Blase is a slippery ball toter who will break into the starting lineup before the season is over if he works at the pace he is in. Curtin who is very fast lacks only experience.

McKenney has [illegible] the week [illegible] the play that cost Fordham the game with Michigan State last Saturday, the Rams third loss in as many years.

WHAT'S POOR PUG TO DO?

Betty Offield, society Lady Bountiful, puts the tap on Pug Retner, captain of Northwestern, to buy tickets for a charity concert. Pug would gladly oblige—but can't the lady see that there are no pockets in football pants? The play calls for a pass.

Gophers Test N'Western; Ramblers Ready to Click

Chicago, Oct 28 (INS)—A battle of fullbacks will provide a fun afternoon for Northwestern and Minnesota linemen at Minneapolis tomorrow. Manders and Olson, if in form, will supply the crushing bruising smashing game that typifies meetings between the Gophers and Wildcats.

As a side-attraction, there undoubtedly will be a passing duel between Pug Rentner and Francis Lund, brilliant Minnesota sophomore back.

Gopher tradition, heavy, shifty, powerful and may cause Olson some trouble with his kicking. The passing of the Purple star has taken Northwestern out of danger more than once this fall but fast charging forwards may cause the ball and toe of the towhead to falter.

Last year Northwestern beat Minnesota 32 to 14. And the Wildcats are [illegible] again tomorrow.

STAGG MEN OVERCONFIDENT

Here in Chicago Coach Stagg is warning his team against overconfidence, a peculiar situation after the past seasons when [illegible] were his chief worry. However, despite the overconfidence said to be breaking down the morale of the Chicagoans, they still should whip Illinois tomorrow.

Dr. Clarence Whitey Spears, Wisconsin's chubby coach, will need plenty of wile at Columbus tomorrow. For the Ohio Staters are convinced that they struck their stride when they held Pitt to a 0 to 0 tie last week and are just as convinced that they will take the Badgers in the same stride. [illegible]

Purdue goes to New York to show the Gothamites that there are other teams in the Middle West besides Notre Dame. New York U. is the opponent and the guess is that the Violets will be even more modest after encountering the Boilermakers.

Princeton comes west to gamble against Michigan at Ann Arbor. And it's a gamble that the Wolverines will administer a severe tail twisting to the Tigers of Old Nassau.

Coach Hartley Anderson blandly announced before entraining for Pittsburgh that he believed that Notre Dame is about ready "to start clicking." Pity the Panthers of Pitt. For 177 points in three games would almost be called "clicking" by most coaches.

The Pitt-Notre Dame game was built up as one of the football battles of the year, but last week's scoreless tie with Ohio State has dissipated much of the glamor of the contest.

GREEN LOOKS FOR TROUBLE FROM BLUE

Hanover N. H., Oct. 29—Although the great majority of football experts in the East look for the Dartmouth eleven to score an easy victory over Yale in the New Haven Bowl tomorrow, the Indians expect to meet a very strong foe in the Bulldog, which has not won a game in four starts this season.

In a half century of grid rivalry the Green has never triumphed over the Blue and it refuses to count its chickens before they are hatched this season.

The Dartmouth scouts, returning to Hanover this week, have warned Coach Cannell and his warriors that the Bulldog has plenty of bite left, despite the fact that its record to date is not terribly impressive.

They have reminded the Indians that Dave Morey has always been known to produce a strong defensive team, and that Bates was able to hold Yale to a 0 to 0 tie is really no positive indication of Yale's weakness.

AT FULL STRENGTH

The Yale jinx has now become Dartmouth tradition, and, although sports writers may hail Dartmouth as a favorite, the team and its undergraduate rooters are looking forward to Saturday's tilt with suspicion, for they have learned that no Dartmouth-Yale contest is decided until the final whistle is blown.

With Morton's probable return to the lineup tomorrow, Dartmouth should be in full force for the battle.

Sweeping Changes in Yale Lineup

New Haven, Ct., Oct 28 (AP) Sweeping changes in the Yale football line up were made as Coach Mal Stevens picked the eleven that will battle Saturday against the powerful Dartmouth Indians.

Two new guards, both light and fast replaced a pair of guards averaging 200 pounds. Walt Kimball who weighs less than 150 pounds was chosen to start at right end and Pat Sullivan was given the quarterback assignment.

Joe Crowley at right half and Lovering fullback, will complete the back field. O'Connell will be at left end. Capt. Wilbur and Curtin will remain as tackles while the injured Joe Johnson will be replaced at center by Vic Malin.

NOTRE DAME, PITT TOP THE GRID CARD

By DAVIS J. WALSH

New York, Oct. 28 (INS)—For the first and perhaps the last time this season, it will be given to two teams in a field of a thousand odd to hold, alone and practically without challenge, the focus of national interest when football comes up to its halfway point tomorrow.

There are a couple of dozen games of more than nominal merit on the schedule, but only the meeting of Pitt, potentially a great football team, and the point-a-minute juggernaut of Notre Dame will keep the nation looking until its last dramatic echo dies and is no more.

The Pitt-Notre Dame affair hardly knows a rival. Both are undefeated, through Pittsburgh lost a lot of caste last week when it finished in a bloodless tie with Ohio State, one of the lesser teams of the Big Ten, whereas Notre Dame has run up 177 points in 180 minutes of play against Drake, Haskell and Carnegie Tech and seemingly is on its merry way to one of those seasons that Rockne contrived and cherished.

COLUMBIA VS. CORNELL

The two high spots of the East will couple the unbeaten teams of Columbia versus Cornell and Harvard versus Brown. It is possible but not probable, that the ultimate champion of the section will survive these meetings.

The high spot of the Big Ten calls for Minnesota versus Northwestern, although nobody is going to stand on a prominent street corner and sneer at Ohio State and Wisconsin.

The Buckeyes are just off that tremendous showing against Pitt while only a one-point defeat by Purdue is keeping Wisconsin out of a few championship plans—and the law says it doesn't have to stay put.

As for Minnesota and Northwestern they're closer than a split-second. One of them, Northwestern, was outplayed by Purdue but eked out a desperate tie; the other, Minnesota, lost to Purdue but has come on impressively from that point.

Purdue's "outside" game is here with New York University and the thing isn't what it was, considering what Colgate did to N. Y. U. last week. Michigan's non-conference meeting is with Princeton and while the tiger has come far under Crisler, it must be many yards away from the team that many say is one of the three greatest in America.

There's quite a ball game down in the South between Alabama and Kentucky, the two power teams and Vanderbilt and Georgia Tech are always interesting.

The Football Roundup

By the Associated Press

Princeton, Oct. 28.—If the Princeton team needed any incentive to try its hardest against Michigan tomorrow, it was supplied by a clipping from a Michigan paper in training quarters before the team left for Ann Arbor. The clipping said that the Michigan students were showing more interest in the "B" teams game against a small teachers college than in the varsity game with the Tigers.

Pittsburgh—Nick Nicksick, the sophomore who has been substituting for Warren Heller in the Pitt backfield, has discovered that it takes more than diligent application to his work on the field to become a useful football player. Nicksick was declared ineligible yesterday because he had failed to attend classes.

Annapolis—A couple of midshipmen who traveled a long way to join the Navy football team, have been getting a lot of praise from the coaches for their offensive work. They are "Killer" Kane of San Rafael, Cal., and "Slim" Brookes of Corpus Christi, Tex.

Ann Arbor—"Old Man" Stagg, Chicago's veteran coach will be honored when the Maroons meet Michigan here November 12. The day has been designated as "Stagg Day" and ceremonies in his honor will be held between the halves.

New York—While Columbia's football team was finishing its preparations for the Cornell game the famous investigation of Columbia football was just getting under way.

Jim Dunn's Quincy Rangers will play the Hillside A. A. of Dorchester at Comins Stadium, Quincy, next Sunday afternoon. The Rangers in their last start shellacked Rockland 32 to 6 with Paul Kendrick the shining light for Quincy scoring two touchdowns.

The Newton Townies will tackle the Natick Independents next Sunday at the Natick Town Field. The Newton team in its last game defeated the Okos of South Boston in a tight game.

TUFTS ELEVEN OFF FOR CONN. AGGIES TILT

With the starting lineup still undetermined, Coach Lew Manly's Tufts grid squad begins the invasion of Connecticut Aggie territory this afternoon, leaving the Oval at 2 o'clock.

Four changes are indicated in the starting eleven, new men being at the ends and two in the backfield.

With Johnny Grinnell and Pat Clark both on the injured list, the Medford eleven has but little hope of gaining ground as far as kicking goes, though Sammy Clayman, veteran quarter, is master at kicking goals.

Clark's shoulder injury will keep him from scrimmage for two more weeks while Grinnell will not be able to start tomorrow because of an ankle injury.

Fred Oliver, stellar sophomore end from Malden, is definitely out for another week and indications point to starting berths for Hammonds and Jake Yajian. The former has never started in a varsity game and the latter is a midget.

'YEOMAN OF THE GUARD,' GILBERT AND SULLIVAN OPERA, WILL BE PRODUCED AGAIN

Milton Aborn's Presentation Will Be First Professional Billing in 43 Years

By NICHOLAS YOUNG

The business of keeping the Gilbert and Sullivan revivals at top speed, and in what Milton Aborn insists must be the grand manner, has laid a heavy duty upon the shoulders of that amiable impresario. But he seems equal to it. News now leaks out that Mr. Aborn has decided to recreate for Hollis audiences on November 7 the little known "Yeoman of the Guard," an opera that is seldom included in Gilbert and Sullivan repertoire.

• • •

Milton Aborn

The last time this production was seen professionally in Boston was at the old Globe Theater in February, [illegible] Its sponsor was Rudolph Aronson, a noted manager of musical entertainment of that period. The Globe Theater, [illegible] the [illegible] occupied by the RKO Boston, was managed by the late John Stetson, one of theater's most interesting as well as [illegible] characters in his day. There was [illegible] in the new world exactly like Stetson, but he knew his business. He was [illegible] but a showman to the [illegible]. It is not reported how well "Yeoman of the Guard" fared during that engagement of 43 years ago, but the piece did run its course and, temporarily, at least, made new friends for Gilbert and Sullivan, whose "Mikado" had swept the country.

• • •

A Comic Opera

Mr. Aborn's presentation for next week is "Patience," a comic opera that antedates "The Mikado," but which has been brought to the stage at none too frequent intervals. When "Patience," under the direction of E. E. Rice was first shown in Boston in July, 1881, only one other American city had seen it—San Francisco. It was played here at the old Bijou Theater, now devoted to second run pictures. Ten years have gone by since "Patience" has enjoyed a staging in Boston. It was done here in 192[illegible] with a cast which included Blanche Duffield, DeWolf Hopper, Eugene Cowles and George MacFarlane. It is reported of "Patience" that when originally produced, it was the first stage show to have its scenes illuminated by electricity. Up to that time gas was good enough.

• • •

ONCE UPON A TIME — George Kraska, the flowing cravated, blond [illegible] of naughty foreign films at the Fine Arts, was not always the gruff manager of cinema presentations. There was a time, not so long ago, when his artistic fame was measured by the manner in which he played a fiddle in [illegible]. Among his best customers [illegible] were the pupils of his teaching days, when the rate was $2 an hour.

• • •

Pinanski as Head

Among the happier items of interest [illegible] the [illegible] is the appointment of Samuel [illegible] Pinanski as director of theater operations in New England. This makes Mr. Pinanski pretty nearly head man in [illegible]. Mr. Pinanski was [illegible] of the [illegible] of NE, O[illegible] Theaters and [illegible] In the meantime he has been a vice president of the [illegible] [illegible]

Tuesday Opening

In order, I suppose, to make it easier for the reviewers, the announcement is made that the opening date of Grace Moore in "The Dubarry" at the Shubert, has been set forward one day—Tuesday, November 8. The chief attractions of that week are "The Dubarry" and Fred Astaire in a new musical concoction called "Gay Divorce," the latter to follow "Springtime For Henry" at the Wilbur. In advancing the date of "The Dubarry," the Shuberts are following an old New York custom of avoiding conflicting presentations for new shows.

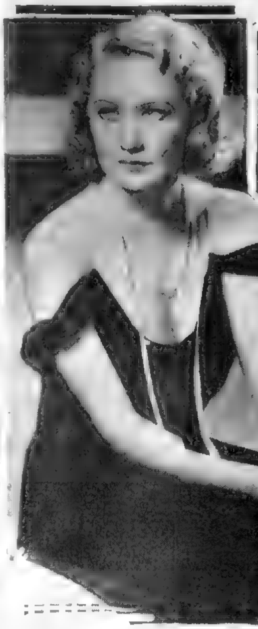
CHARGE, BOYS, CHARGE — Wallace Munro, courier in advance of Mr. Shubert's operettas, [illegible] was a bad Scottish [illegible] taking up the [illegible] of writing pieces for newspapers. Mr. Munro was a gallant member of the [illegible] [illegible] And [illegible]

POLITICAL WHIRL INTERWEAVES ROMANCE ON SCREEN



Miriam Hopkins is the Lily in "Trouble in Paradise," an Ernst Lubitsch film given its "world premiere" at the Metropolitan today. The story deals with gay life in Paris and Venice.

Constance Cummings, always an eyeful, gives Lee Tracy an earful in "The Washington Merry-Go-Round," story of life in the nation's capital, coming to the RKO Keith screen tomorrow.

"Hello Harlem" Comes to Bowdoin Next Week

The Negro show, "Hello Harlem," will be the feature attraction next week at the Bowdoin Square. Bebe Allen De Mar, Carter and Glass, Peg Leg Fox, the [illegible] Trio and the three "Hotshots" are some of the performers. The cast includes 35 persons.

Vaudeville at Egyptian and the Central Square

Vaudeville tonight has its introduction into programs at the Egyptian in Brighton and the Central Square in Cambridge. A stage show of five acts with a band will augment the regular double feature program every Friday night from now on. Regular prices will prevail.

Sibelius Tone Poem on List

The Boston Symphony Orchestra [illegible] [illegible] Ann Arbor, Cincinnati, Columbus, Pittsburgh and Ithaca. The next regular pair of concerts will therefore take place on Friday afternoon and Saturday evening, Nov. 4 and 5. Dr. Serge Koussevitzky will then give the first American performance of Prokofieff's setting of Dostoievsky's "The Gambler."

Another score new to Boston will be "Tapiola," a tone poem by Sibelius.

There will be a symphony concert in Cambridge on Thursday, Nov. 3. The opening concert of the Monday evening series will take place on Nov. 7.

French Romantic Comedy Coming to the Fine Arts

The Fine Arts screen goes French next week with a romantic comedy called "La Couturiere de Luneville" ("The Dressmaker of Luneville"), with Madelaine Renaud of the Comedie-Francaise as the star. Mlle. Renaud was seen at the Fine Arts in "Jean de la Lune" last fall. Mlle. Renaud has the double role of Anna, the dressmaker, and Irene, the film star.

Bonus Army

State Commander James P. Rose and staff of the American Legion will attend RKO Keith's tomorrow night to see the Bonus Army on the screen. The presentation of "Washington Merry-Go-Round" has aroused much interest among ex-service men of the World War, because it pictures the encampment of the Bonus Army on the Anacostia Flats, near Washington, during the past summer.

DAILY NEWS FROM HOLLYWOOD

By Louella O. Parsons

All Films Competing for Annual Filmdom Award to Be Rerun for Committee of Judges

By LOUELLA O. PARSONS

Universal Service Motion Picture Editor

Louella O. Parsons

Los Angeles, Oct. 28—Away from the hustle and bustle of Hollywood, David O. Selznick aboard the President Coolidge headed for New York, had a brilliant idea. He thought it might facilitate the selection of the prize winners of the annual academy award dinner, November 18, if all academy members could see the films from which the best acting, best direction, best technician work and finest productions are to be chosen.

David sent a radio and suggested that the Criterion Theater be taken over and all competing films be shown there from November 10 to 16 inclusive. He is chairman of the awards committee. The public as well as the academy members can also look at these films.

The pictures shown will be "Emma," "The Guardsman," "Sin of Madelon Claudet," "The Champ," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," "Bad Girl," "Shanghai Express," "Arrowsmith," "Star Witness," "What Price Hollywood," "Grand Hotel," "One Hour with You," "The Smiling Lieutenant."

Claire Windsor in Cast

The unpleasantness of the Albert Read romance notwithstanding, Claire Windsor looks better than I have seen her in months. Her skin is so smooth and unlined that she might be the girl I first knew 10 years ago. Claire is returning to the screen and all of her friends are glad, for she should get a break. She will make a picture for Trem Carr, "Man's Law," based on Peter B. Kyne's story, "The Best Judge." In the same cast, playing the other leads, are Lois Wilson and Barbara Kent. George Hackathorne, and let me say I am very happy that George has a job for he is a grand actor, and Theodore von Eltz are the other names.

Lillian Harvey's First

I feel a personal interest in Lilian Harvey's first American-made picture. So much depends upon her introduction to her American public. Winfield Sheehan has spent weeks making up his mind what type of story Fox should offer to follow "Congress Dances," the foreign picture which has already endeared her to fans in this country. "Her Majesty's Car," a German play, is, Mr. Sheehan tells me, his final choice for Miss Harvey. It's a semi-musical play and both Miss Harvey and John Boles, her leading man, will have special song numbers. Hans Kraley is writing the adaptation. El Brendel and Spencer Tracy are the other two members of the cast chosen, while to David Butler will fall the pleasant task of directing the former UFA beauty.

A wise woman changes her mind, a foolish one never. Now that copy book axiom sounds all wrong. But the meaning is correct. What I am trying to say is that Mary Pickford in her intense eagerness to make her next picture a success has again changed her production plans. Instead of Frances Marion's "Shantytown," which is not really ready for the screen, she will begin work this coming week in a new version of "Secrets." Salisbury Fields (Ned to his pals) has written the dialogue and Frances has put her best efforts into the continuity. "Shantytown" will follow "Secrets"—and perhaps it's as well it was postponed since Frances was paged by Irving Thalberg to go to work at Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer and the story isn't really in shape for the screen.

Studio Notes

Carmelita Geraghty wires to say that Parsons, Jr., was misinformed about her forthcoming marriage to Carey Wilson. Carey, it appears, hasn't his interlocutory divorce decree and therefore cannot be married to anyone for some months. Saw Antonio Moreno on the Warner Brothers' lot. He is doing the adaptation for "Keyhole" by Raoul Whitfield. Tony wants to direct and it looks as if he may get his heart's desire. The motor car in which Eleanor Holm, swim expert, had an accident, was an old Ford which Daisy and Tony let her borrow because she didn't have her own car here.

Chatter in Hollywood

Rita Laroy is out of the cast of "Call Her Savage" and Rita doesn't care who knows it. She walked out after she was asked to play a scene in the pioneer sequence in which she had to expose more of her anatomy than she thought proper. She argued that women were more modest in '49. Her director thought otherwise. Young Jesse Lasky has resigned from Paramount. Jesse remained on even after his father joined Fox. He has been doing good work and this week the Paramount organization asked him to reconsider but the young man, I am told, has other plans.

A Line or Two:

Antoine may be the rage in Paris but he hasn't any more devoted and famous patrons than our own Jim right here in Hollywood. Jim—and his full name is Simonelli — has opened a new beauty shop and on opening day his visitors resembled a who's who in the movie social whirl. Among the floral tributes sent to Jim were baskets received from Mary Pickford, Joan Crawford, Bebe Daniels, Billie Dove, Jackie Cooper, Bess Meredyth, Mrs. Sidney Franklin and many others. Dorothy Arzner, Hollywood's sole femme director, is on the Radio lot. She will direct Ann Harding. Not in "The Fountain" but in an original now being prepared for the lady with the molasses colored tresses. Harry Cohn did leave town and by train. Also he had another change of mind before he took the choo choo and he gave Mae Clarke the feminine lead in "Acquitted." Fay Wray, at the eleventh hour, didn't sign.

Snapshots of Hollywood

ANN HARDING has ceased being air-minded. She is trying to sell her plane. JOEL McCREA is seen places with PATRICIA JANSS, a society beauty, and is she pretty? EDDIE LOWE leaves Friday night by air to bring home LILYAN TASHMAN. LIL returns minus an appendix and with lots of front page stories. The El Nido camp is getting a helping hand tomorrow night from the film folk. A dinner dance at the Cocoanut Grove will be held following the premiere of "Life Begins." WHEELER and WOOLSEY, JEANETTE MacDONALD and others have offered their services. Those two gentlemen, LEW CODY and BUSTER KEATON, prefer brunettes, at least they were out dancing at the Frolics with two dark-haired girls. BERT WHEELER at the same place with a blonde beauty. WALLY FORD and his wife, BILL (Stage) BOYD accompanied by ESTHER BROADALET at same place. JOAN BENNETT home sick with a bad cold. AILEEN ROTHACKER with a chic new haircut, at RITA KAUFMAN'S dinner. MRS. RICHARD BARTHELMESS in a stunning black gown trimmed with ermine tails, MRS. HENRY KING in a green velvet dress, same dress worn by another who didn't look as well as gypsy. WINFIELD SHEEHAN'S latest discovery, BOOTS MALLORY, much admired. GENEVIEVE TOBIN back from England, escorted to the dinner by AL KAUFMAN, RITA'S ex and good friend. That's all today.

Norma Shearer Adds New Fame in Her 'Smilin' Through' Role

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Welcome the coming, speed the parting guest! It so happens that it is the same person who gets this coming-and-going salutation. From the Majestic, Norma Shearer cinematically steps out tomorrow night to make way for herself coming into the Loew's State and Orpheum.

It is never intended in theaterdom that the same star shall rival himself or herself. For this reason "Smilin' Through" was held back to permit a run of "Strange Interlude." The former now bows in, while the latter bows itself out.

One who has seen both pictures is struck by the new artistry of Miss Shearer. In the Eugene O'Neill drama she, for the first time, demonstrated the histrionic range of adaptability to portrayal from girlhood into grey hairs. She thus steps up into the highest ranks of the screen players, few in number. Her Nina Leeds is one of the great characterizations of motion pictures.

In "Smilin' Through" she achieves what is probably her peak performance. Though there do not exist the same demands for changes in make-up and age, yet there are requirements which make the part a rare achievement when so splendidly enacted as Miss Shearer has done it. It is one of the best of all the talkies, and one of the best of all motion pictures, sound or silent.

Kreisler Sunday

Fritz Kreisler will open the season of Sunday afternoon recitals in Symphony Hall next Sunday at 3:30.

Globe Trotter

With the presidential fight approaching a climax Hearst Metrotone News, at Loew's Orpheum presents the latest pictures from both camps. At Detroit President Hoover is seen and heard as he addresses a great crowd and proclaims, "We will win."

Then follows Governor Roosevelt's speech in Pittsburgh when he comes out flatly against the soldier bonus "until the budget is balanced not on paper only, but when there is a surplus in the treasury." Wild enthusiasm greets his statement that a modification of the Volstead Act would add millions of dollars a year to the nation's revenue.

The Soviet government, which has been adopting American methods in many things, has now added athletic training for the youth of the land.

All of the thrilling plays of the gridiron battle between the Navy and Princeton teams at Princeton, in which they fight to a scoreless tie, are presented.

ROOSEVELT HAS 41 STATES IN DIGEST POLL

Roosevelt is shown holding his lead of 3 to 2 over Hoover in the semi-final returns of the Literary Digest's nation-wide presidential poll, according to to-morrow's issue of the magazine, which gives a tabulation of nearly 3,000,000 votes. This is a larger return, it is announced, than the final returns of the 1928 Literary Digest poll.

Of a total of 2,933,600 votes tallied Roosevelt has 56.19 per cent or 1,648,237 votes while Hoover has 37.33 per cent, or 1,095,274 ballots and Thomas has 141,962 votes or 4.84 per cent of the total number counted.

Hoover shows a slight gain from 37.19 per cent of the total vote which he had last week.

Hoover continues to carry the seven states of Maine, Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Connecticut and New Jersey with only scant changes shown in the week's balloting in any of them.

Roosevelt continues to carry all of the other 41 states.

With over 300,000 additional ballots received and counted during the past week mailed from every section of the country, neither candidate shows a gain or loss in any state of more than 1 per cent.

474 ELECTORAL VOTES

In a division of the vote for apportionment in teh electoral college the semi-final returns would give Roosevelt 474 electoral votes to Hoover's 57.

The vote in New York continues to be closer than in any other State although still carried by Roosevelt making the outcome here still doubtful. Roosevelt is polling 167,084 votes to Hoover's 157,845, a very slight increase for the President over last week's returns.

The race is also very close in Delaware, where Roosevelt's lead has been cut from a plurality of 202 votes last week to 175 votes this week out of a total of 4907 cast in the state.

In an analysis of "how the same voters voted in 1928," Roosevelt is shown obtaining 37.19 per cent of his strength from former Republicans, which is an increase over the ratio he received in last week's returns. The same analysis indicates that Hoover is obtaining 80.61 per cent of his votes from former Republican ranks and 6.09 per cent from former Democrats, which ratios are practically the same as those reported last week.

It is revealed also that Roosevelt continued to obtain more votes from from those who voted for his rival in 1928 than from members of his own party in the 12 States of California, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Nevada, North Dakota, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

HOW BAY STATE GOES

Massachusetts still gives Hoover the largest plurality he receives in any state. He leads his Democratic rival here by a vote of 57,707 to 33,023. Roosevelt continues to show a clear majority in 39 states in the polling up-to-date.

Kansas, regarded by many as a doubtful state, now shows a vote of 27,757 for Roosevelt to 22,372 for Hoover.

In California, the home state of the President, the Democratic candidate has a lead of 143,584 votes to 77,875.

WHAT 1928 POLL SHOWED

"Several states where the vote is close may be fairly classed as doubtful and may appear in the opposite column on November 8.

You'll notice that the States honored with visits and speeches are fairly evenly balanced in the poll, also that they have large blocks of electoral votes. It is seldom that anybody bothers much about the States of scanty electoral votes.

"Meanwhile the campaign has plunged into its bare-knuckle stage—the crisis of that quadrennial fever which disrupts American life, and throws the best of neighbors into a cat and dog feud until the passing of election day releases them from the spell and allows them to see what jolly good fellows they've been shaking their fists at.

The semifinal returns of the 1928 Literary Digest poll showed Hoover leading in 44 States and Smith in four. The figures forecast that Mr Hoover would capture four States of the "solid South"—Virginia, North Carolina, Texas and Florida—which he did in the election.

Books and Characters

By LINCOLN KIRSTEIN

God's Angry Man Who Caused a War

Every so often there comes a novel which redeems from the welter of paper, print and buckram that is most publishing, a book which is more than a pale echo of some stray observer's personal life or the records of his casual interests, a book which is a new testimony to the power possible in good literature. Such a very remarkable book is "God's Angry Man," by Leonard Ehrlich, published this week by Simon and Schuster. It is a book which will be read and widely praised and which deserves far more than a season's success.

* * *

GOD'S ANGRY MAN is pretty nearly a perfect title. Even before one knows what the book is about, there is in the iron of the name, the echo of John Brown, Brown of Osawatomie, Brown of Harper's Ferry, John Brown, whose body lies amouldering in his grave but his soul surely marches on in the fierce pages of Mr. Ehrlich's brilliant book.

Lincoln Kirstein

John Brown as a hero is a part of American mythology. He has been variously interpreted in the North as a saint, in the South as a traitor, and by modern historians as an insane revolutionist.

* * *

Maybe he was something of all of these. He had the intense dedication to a principle beyond his own self shared by the saints, he raised arms and led an insurrection against the State of Virginia and against the United States of America—and in the black Kansas night, in utter cold blood, he butchered with double-edged steel sabres men who, sharing slavery sympathies, owned no slaves.

* * *

Raised Cash in Boston

The story of John Brown, as told by Mr Ehrlich, is more than a history. At first it is a glowing narrative, fused with actual documents, studded with people whose children are living to read it. As it progresses, the facts commence to burn.

From the Kansas blood we are shifted to a tour in ominous New England, where Brown, with no fear or thought of anything but the ultimate freedom of the slaves raises money from Abolitionist Bostonians. Thomas Wentworth Higginson, then a poor preacher; Theodore Parker, another servant of God; Henry David Thoreau, who, by Lake Walden, gave Brown his philosophical principle of justice above the law of the land—all contributed money to arm Negroes and whites, with guns, pikes or bowie-knives, to raise a rebellion which would mean freedom.

Brown spoke before the joint committee on federal relations of the Massachusetts Legislature, to defend a bill for an appropriation for the defense of Massachusetts men in bloody Kansas. The bill was not carried. His hopes for help from the North were almost exhausted. On a back street in Boston Brown stayed with the family of Judge Thomas Russell. He played with the two-year-old Russell girl, saying:

"When I am hanged for treason, little one, you can say that you used to stand on Captain Brown's hand."

* * *

At night he would barricade his door, see his two pistols were loaded on his pillow. He could not afford to be taken alive. He made complete plans for the Negro revolt. He studied military tactics. He hired a renegade English drill-master who later failed to betray him. He wrote a new constitution of the United States which could be used by the Provisional Government which would result from his plotting. The Negro, Douglas, who was his most trusted aide, blanched at the thought of the treason that Brown was, of necessity, embarking upon.

* * *

Floyd, the United States Secretary of War, received anonymous warnings against the coming terror. He consigned them to his wastepaper basket as the work of a crank. Besides, he was too busy seeing that his own state of Virginia was well provided with military stores in case—just in case—of the inevitable war.

Caused Civil War

But nothing is inevitable until after it has happened and now we can say that if any one single person made the Civil War inevitable, it was not the author of "Uncle Tom's Cabin," nor Abraham Lincoln's election, nor even the unspeakable John Calhoun. It was God's Angry Man who took the army stores at Harper's Ferry, with a few black men and dozen white, with an average age, excluding his own, of 21.

* * *

He marched into an armed post with an army of 21 men, fully confident that his revolutionary act would inflame the countryside, that the Negroes of all the land would spring to his defense, that America would be, in the sight of God, a holy land of freedom.

How he failed is the fire of Mr Ehrlich's story. The recounting of those days, those dreadful hours also the heavy minutes in the barricaded garrison, are among the most genuinely terrible and tragic pages in the roll of our history. And just as there was the grim irony that selected a Colonel Robert E. Lee to order a Lieutenant J. E. B. Stuart to take John Brown for insurrection against the Federal Union, it is similarly fitting that the deep chords of John Brown's disaster should preface that inestimable holocaust made up of the names of Shiloh, Malvern Hill, Gettysburg, Bull Run, and Chancellorsville.

* * *

"Action from principle, the perception and the performance of right, changes things and relations; it is essentially revolutionary, and does not consist wholly with anything that was. It not only divides states and churches, it divides families; aye, it divides the individual, separating the diabolical in him from the divine."

Thus Thoreau, who gave words to the tense unvoiced conviction of our greatest American revolutionist since Thomas Jefferson. John Brown did not know what would follow the day of his execution. Stonewall Jackson was an anonymous watcher in the attendant crowd. So was a bad actor called John Wilkes Booth.

R. I. CONGRESS NOMINEES ARE ALL PLEDGED FOR REPEAL

The four Rhode Island candidates for Congress, to the last man of them, favor repeal of prohibition.

They set forth their attitude very plainly and succinctly in telegraphic replies they have sent to the Boston Evening American in response to the question:

"Do you favor or oppose prohibition?"

Rhode Island loses one of its three Congressmen this year as the result of the Congressional reapportionment. Two, therefore, will be elected.

One of the interesting results of this reduction is that two of the present Congressmen—Clark Burdick, Republican, and Francis B. Condon, Democrat—are contesting against each other in what is today the First Rhode Island District.

Interesting enough, their replies to the query were identical.

In the other district, the responses of the two contestants were equally positive, if couched in difference language.

"I favor repeal of the prohibition amendment," said T. P. Hazard, the Republican nominee.

"On this and all major issues I stand four square behind Franklin D. Roosevelt," said Dr. John M. O'Connell, the Democratic contestant.

As Governor Roosevelt is for repeal of prohibition and for immediat modification of the Volstead Act, Dr. O'Connell's attitude is for a change away from the existing conditions.

These gentlemen believe that the overwhelming sentiment of their constituents is for elimination of the Eighteenth Amendment. Rhode Island was the first state to decline to ratify the amendment when it was submitted to the Legislatures.

Moreover, it was the only commonwealth to test the validity of the prohibition enforcement laws in the courts.

To the north of Massachusetts, the attitude of the candidates shows some interesting diversions according to the telegraphic replies received by the Boston Evening American.

New Hampshire does not show quite such unanimity. The two Democratic candidates—Congressman William N. Rogers and Jeremiah J. Doyle—are for repeal.

"I favor repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment."

"I am in favor of the repeal of the Eighteenth Amendment. I favor immediate modification of the Volstead Act."

"I am for temperance. I am against the return of the saloon.

"I do, however, favor submission to the states of an amendment to the Eighteenth Amendment which will permit the manufacture and sale of alcoholic beverages within the borders of any state which so votes, provided the regulations governing the manufacture and sale are sufficiently stringent to definitely prohibit the saloons, and provided the federal government is obligated to assist in keeping dry those states which vote dry."

The reply of the other New Hampshire contestant, Charles W. Tobey, Republican, will be published when it is received.

Bowlegs, Girls? It's Only Your High Heels

Chicago, Oct. 29 (AP)—Some women who think they are bowlegged are really not bowlegged at all, in the opinion of Dr. Amenuel Demeur of the Illinois Association of Chiropodists.

"High heels," he said, "have caused the shins of many young women to turn outward, rotating the knees. This condition gives the incorrect impression that they have bowlegs. Wearing of proper shoes in such cases will bring the legs back to normal.

EXPECT ARREST IN HIT-RUN CASE

Lowell, Oct. 28—Police declared that they were prepared for the early arrest of the hit-pick up-drop-and-run driver whose machine struck George H. Regan, of Broadway, this city, last night.

Regan was found in a semi-conscious condition by Patrolman Frank Grady and Alfred Killoy on Common st., and removed to St. John's Hospital for treatment.

Police believe that the victim was struck by the auto on Broadway, picked up by the driver and carried to Common st., where he was dumped from the machine.

CAME THE DAWN . . . ! After sober thought we will try and give you a moving picture . . . a talkie . . . of what we encountered in our travels yesterday . . .

Rose Stearns, dusky-haired daughter of Mrs. Frank Jenkins, stepped into the social spotlight at the Ritz in a wine-colored frock trimmed with fox and wearing white orchids . . . the man of the hour at her luncheon was the street singer who yodeled all through the celebration much to the delight of the debs . . .

• • •

At the appointed hour we waded out to Beacon st. in time to greet Lydia Fuller, wish her many happy returns of the day . . . and welcome her to society. Mrs. Alvan T. Fuller received with her lovely daughter in the library . . . we could use all of the superlatives we know on the Fuller mansion and still feel we did not do justice to it. If we forget to tell you that the youthful debutante wore a beautifully cut chartreuse velvet gown, her slender throat garnished with an exquisite Venetian necklace of gold and jewels . . . that her mother was regal in gray crepe trimmed with sable and as sweetly gracious as always . . . that our highly esteemed ex-governor was his usual genial and interesting self and a decided addition to the party . . .

That we have never partaken of a more perfect or sumptuous collation . . .

That the spacious rooms were a bower of blossoms which had been sent to the debutante.

It is because we were so enchanted with the paintings which adorn the walls of the Fuller home and which are world famous . . . never have we had such a feast for the eyes and the soul . . .

As we danced to the strains of the orchestra in the golden music room, surrounded by Rembrandts, Gainsboroughs and Millaises, we wanted to WEEP with sheer rapture . . . time will never efface the memory of "Call a Herring," the portrait of a wistful fishermaiden looking out to sea, by Sir J. E. Millais . . . as we danced and danced back and forth in front of it.

Friends From Far and Near

THE TEA TABLE WAS A PERFECT TRAFFIC jam of friends far and near . . . young and not so young . . .

A huge silver bowl filled with pink roses flanked by heavy silver candelabra adorned the rare lace cloth on which the tea urns rested . . . the table was laden with delicious delicacies to delight the most jaded tea-toter . . .

Edith Bird Bass took our breath away in slimmy black with scarlet girdle and scarf . . . she assisted at the tea tables . . .

Mrs. Ralph Doane Welcomes Deb

IN THE CROWD WE NOTED MRS. RALPH DOANE . . . you remember her sister Mrs. Russell was the first president of the Vincent Club . . .

Mrs. William Farnum Greene, very smart in a black afternoon frock . . .

Mr. and Mrs. Louis Agassiz Shaw were chatting with the tall and handsome Robert Treat Paine . . .

Hundreds of handsome cavaliers waited for Lydia to leave the receiving line to whirl her into a dance . . . it was a REAL coming-out party as in the days of yore . . .

Streets were jammed with automobiles for blocks on our departure . . . as we looked back at the marble mansion, lights pouring forth from every window, strains of music drifting out into the night, youthful couples on the balconies for the breath of the evening air . . . we sent back the wish "Many happy returns of this day, Miss Fuller."

More Glimpses of the Horse Show

DOWN TO THE BOSTON GARDEN we scurried, eager to see King Horse do his stuff once again . . . As we galloped into the lobby we greeted Mrs. Ronald T. Lyman and her escort, Col. Cortlandt Parker, military attache of London . . . Mrs. Lyman in a fascinating gown of Burgundy velvet . . .

Chatted a moment with Mrs. Whitfield Painter and her so-very-attractive husband . . . her costume of black satin and silver fox was the last word in chic . . .

Mrs. Harold J. Coolidge in light blue lace and Mandarin coat was cavalierred by Lawrence Smith Butler . . . again.

In the Robert Almys' party was Mrs. MacBrien, wife of the head of the Canadian Royal Northwest Mounted Police and one of the judges . . . very smart in velvet with satin top . . . Mrs. Almy was a dainty wraith in brown flowered chiffon . . .

With a nod, a smile and a wave of the hand, off we tore again in a taxi to the event to which we had been looking forward ALL WEEK . . . Ellen O'Donnell's voyage into the social world aboard the good ship ST. JOHN . . .

We tripped . . . we always do . . . up the gangway as sounds of music floated over the brightly lighted harbor . . .

Miss Ellen and her charming mother greeted us in the main salon, so filled with blossoms it looked like a flower show . . . one huge basket of chrysanthemums, russet and yellow, from the conservatories of Mrs. Galen Stone, might have taken a prize anywhere . . .

In ivory velvet with cape trimmed with soft fox, the glowing debutante met her friends . . . Mrs. O'Donnell stood smilingly by in black velvet edged with ermine . . . a lovely picture . . .

* * *

On the promenade deck we saw Jane Bogardus and Hamilton Young tripping the light fantastic . . . Jane very svelte in the new red shade of satin . . .

Rosamond Emerson . . . what a dainty child she is . . . wore black as she laughed with her friends Karolyn Sampson, A. Eliot Ritchie, Jr., and Allen Benner . . .

Peeking through the port, we saw Frances Poinier, Elizabeth Hollis, Albert Pratt and Peter Percival as they waved an imaginary fare-thee-well to friends ashore . .

* * *

Designed Ballroom

THE ST. JOHN is like a miniature ocean liner, so complete, so sumptuous, so modern . . . we wished someone would slip a hawser . . . or whatever they slip . . . and take us all away to unknown lands for a fortnight .

The ballroom, so Ellen's fond daddy, Capt. O'Donnell, told us was designed by her . . . it is a dream . . . lighted sky effect, large mirrors, sunken floor and comfy lounges . . .

Slipping out onto the boat deck for ONE romantic moment with the E. N. O., we gazed across the smooth waters into the mysterious night and thought "Happy Voyage, Miss Ellen."

JUST LIKE A WOMAN ◆ Feminine Interests In the Day's News ◆ By Marguerite Marshall

Many Wives Forced to Get Jobs

INTO THE BOILING whirlpool of one of the chief controversies of unemployment—the question of whether married women should hold jobs—falls a stone of fact from the Census Bureau. It is this:

The number of married women who work for wages has increased 60 per cent in the last ten years.

Even that simple statistic does not tell the whole story. Put beside it another recent report from the Census Bureau, comparing the whole number of women workers in 1920 and 1930.

Ten years ago 8,549,000 women, out of a total of 40,449,000 10 years of age and more, were listed as gainfully employed. In percentages, 21.1 of all the women in the country earned money.

At the end of the decade, in 1930, the feminine earners formed a total of [illegible] out of the female population of 48,773,000 or 22 per cent.

That is to say, while women workers as a group increased only about 1 per cent during the past ten years, MARRIED women workers during the same period of time increased 60 per cent!

Surely the first thing which these amazing figures show is the complete futility of the campaign against giving the married woman a pay envelope. King Canute demanding the tide to retreat was no more inconsequential figure than anybody who, in this year of grace, tries to tell American wives to go back home and leave the paid jobs to girls and men.

Their unjust and unnecessary suffering, caused not only by the employer's prejudice, but by the hostility of fellow workers, is illustrated in Catharine Brady's fine new saga of American workers, "Nobody Starves."

Molly, the wage-earning wife in this tragically appealing tale, stands in the locker room of her shop, flailed with bitter comments from the "single girls," because she has a husband as well as a job. What the girls don't know is that the husband has just been laid off for good. She tells them, finally, burning with the injustice of their enmity, and one savage sentence sums up her case

"Do you think because you're married you don't have to eat?"

For many another working wife it is as true as it was of Molly, that "just because she was married, it didn't mean that her burden was even halved."

The Marry-Go-Round

These Modern Lovers

By HELEN ROWLAND

OF COURSE, marriage has changed in the last decade! It used to be a Gordian Knot and now it's a slip knot.

* * *

Helen Rowland

When a woman is not getting over a love affair she is usually getting INTO one. But ambidextrous man can do both at the same time without even shifting gears.

* * *

No woman was ever so foolish as to think that she could "teach a man to love her"; but no man ever doubted for a moment that he could "teach a woman to love him," just by marrying her and giving her the opportunity to pick up his clothes, count his laundry and wipe his safety razor.

* * *

The meanest trick that Nature can play upon a man, says Reno Ruth, is to endow him with dimples and curly hair instead of with brains and dignity; and the meanest trick she can play upon a woman is to hand her brains instead of a retroussé nose and a few dimples.

* * *

* * *

In Italy the bachelors pay two and a half million dollars in taxes for the privilege of remaining single. In America the ex-husbands pay seventeen million dollars (yearly) in alimony for the privilege of changing their minds.

* * *

It is rather a shock to a man's vanity to discover that a girl to whom he has been making love, just as a little diversion, has been letting him do it just as a pastime until the REAL boy friend arrives.

* * *

"Prosperity" to lots of people who sigh for its return, consisted in owning a mortgaged car, a lot of installment furniture and a closet full of clothes bought on a charge account. "Prosperity" was a fine racket!

Broadcloth Coat Is Popular

By PARIS BUREAU

PARIS, Oct. 28—The broadcloth coat is a distinct 1933 success in Paris.

Chanel likes broadcloth, especially when it is used in an informal way. She uses it for coats that are cut on the fitted line, so that the smooth, soft texture of the fabric may show off at its best in long, unbroken lines.

As the sketch shows, the coat seams are all vertical and the waistline is deftly marked by girdling—both features giving an effect of added height. Although the coat is double-breasted, there are only two buttons—and these are of matching fabric, so as to be as inconspicuous as possible. Tailored collar, lapels and cuffs, as well as pocketbooks, are faced with baby leopard.

The dress worn with this coat although of the same bright dark green, is of a different wool fabric—a lightweight crepey material. The seams are well marked by double stitching, and the pockets are obviously protruding. The buttons which mark the shoulder fastening are of the dress fabric.

Good Desserts For School Children

By MARTHA LEE

From Martha Lee's Friday Morning Broadcast Over Station WAAB

BOOKS LIE scattered all over the house, the first report cards have been anxiously scanned, and "home work" has become the national dinner topic. For the children are once more deep in the w. k. "three R's," and what was novelty has now become habit.

About half the nation's mothers are daily packing lunch boxes to be carried to school and the other half are pondering on what to set upon the table when the young things scamper home at [illegible]

Since youngsters the world over "save the best 'til last," dessert is a most important part of the schoolday meal. The ideal dessert satisfies that digestion of the foregoing meal.

With Junket Powders, delicious wholesome desserts can be made, for instance

Junket Pudding

Use 1 package of junket powder to 1 pint of milk, or 1 level rounded tablespoon of chocolate junket powder to ½ cup milk for a single dish. Set out individual serving dishes; warm a pint of fresh milk until barely warm, stirring constantly. Then remove from stove (test by letting a drop or two fall on your wrist). Then add a package of junket powder—in any of the several flavors—and stir briskly to dissolve, not more than one minute. Pour into the dessert glasses and let stand undisturbed in a warm room until firm. When set, chill in the refrigerator. Serve in the same glasses, plain or with whipped cream or a topping.

Florida Bread and Butter Pudding

1 pint milk
1 pkg. lemon junket powder
Raisins
2 slices bread, ¼-inch thick
Butter

Remove the crusts from bread, butter lightly and cut in small cubes. Divide the cubed bread among four dessert dishes and add a few seeded raisins to each serving. Warm the milk to lukewarm—NOT HOT; remove from the stove, add the lemon junket powder. Stir one minute until dissolved, then pour over the bread and raisins. Let stand in a warm room until firm. Sprinkle with a mixture of sugar and cinnamon before serving.

Ask Boy, Advises Miss Fairfax

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX

About one year ago I went with a young man eight years older than I, who seems to consider himself a little better, due to his more liberal education. Every time I see him I like him better. We work in the same building and he speaks to me every time I see him, and usually compliments me about something I have one, or how I look. He comes up to the house occasionally and he seems very fond of me, but I don't know if he does it to be courteous or if he really likes me. Since I have stopped going with him I have gone with several other young men, but it seems that he is the only one I care anything about. Would it be proper for me to ask him to go to a party with me, where I am supposed to bring a young man?

L.

Dear L.: By all means ask him to the party, look your best, give him an opportunity to pay his usual compliments with interest. My best wishes.

Ingrowing Nails Need Much Attention

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

IT IS COMMON to hear about persons who suffer from ingrown toenail, and if you have ever had one yourself, you can appreciate the terrible pain and discomfort associated with this ailment. It should not be neglected.

Dr. Copeland

The trouble is most likely to affect the nail of the big toe. The edge of the nail grows too close to the skin and irritates the skin, breaking the tissues, which may become infected. The disability continues as long as the irritating nail continues to rub against the inflamed skin.

Ingrown toenail is often traced to the wearing of poorly fitted shoes, but it may come from improper care of the nails. In a few cases, overzealous attention to the nails may be the cause.

In mild cases, the pain may be relieved by pressing the flesh away from the edge of the nail and placing a small piece of absorbent cotton under the nail. The cotton should be moistened with an astringent solution, preferably one that has some antiseptic value. A clean and moist dressing should be applied every day, and the cotton should be kept under the edge of the nail until the nail has grown out to the end of the toe. Then the nail should be smoothly trimmed.

The operation is done under local anesthesia, and causes little pain or discomfort.

Daily True Story

The Additional Two Dollars

WHEN SAM ANDERSON opened his pay-envelope he discovered that it contained twenty dollars. Blinking, he counted the money again, sure that he had made some mistake. On every previous Saturday he had received only eighteen dollars, and it wasn't like Old Schwartz of the Schwartz Lumber Company to be passing around extra dollars.

But a second count resulted the same as the first. Three fives and five ones add up to twenty. He grinned and took two of the one-dollar bills, folded them up as small as he could, and slipped them in his shirt pocket. The other eighteen dollars went back into the pay envelope to be handed over to Ida when he got home. That two dollars was extra. It represented a mistake of Old Schwartz, who, according to talk in the yard, had never been known to give anyone a raise in his life. All the way home Sam planned how he was going to spend it.

Sam didn't tell Ida about the two dollars. He had several good reasons for keeping the information to himself. In the first place Ida had been nagging him about asking for a raise. She couldn't understand about Old Schwartz and wouldn't believe that he never gave a raise. Of course, she would have considered the two dollars as a raise and when Sam's envelope contained only the usual eighteen dollars next week, he would never be able to convince her that he hadn't appropriated two dollars for his own use. Then, incidentally she would have kept the two dollars for household expenses.

SHOOK HIS HEAD

As usual on payday she greeted him with the question:

"Well, did you ask Mr. Schwartz for more money?"

And, as usual, Sam shook his head.

After they had finished eating, Sam changed his clothing and went down to see Bert Riley. He had been talking to Bert for an hour before he realized that he had left the two dollars in the pocket of his work shirt. It was funny that he had forgotten to bring it along for he certainly hadn't meant to leave it lying around for Ida to find. And as quickly as possible, he excused himself and hurried home.

He found the $2, but it wasn't in the pocket of his shirt. It was out in plain sight on the bureau, and beneath it was a note. Sam picked up the note and read it:

"Sam—I found the money by accident, but I don't know how long you've been getting it. I never thought you'd deceive me. I'm going away.—Ida."

ONLY A HABIT

In some way or other, Sam managed to get along until Monday morning. He wandered through the house, restlessly. Read and reread the note until the words jumbled and meant nothing. He kept thinking Ida would come back and haunted the front door. It was only a habit, not a desire to work, that made him report at the Schwartz Lumber Co. at 8 o'clock.

Old Man Schwartz passed through the yard twice, and each time, it seemed to Sam, the old man paused to look at him curiously. Sam began to get angry. He knew what the trouble was with old Schwartz. He had discovered that he was $2 short and was worrying about it. Sam grinned, mirthlessly. Let him worry. He could never prove that the $2 had gone into the envelope of one, Sam Anderson.

Nevertheless, when the foreman called to Sam a little later and told him that Schwartz wanted to see him, Sam was just a little frightened. Of course, he was safe, but just the same, Schwartz might definitely know that it was his envelope that had contained the extra two dollars. Surreptitiously, he took the money out of his pocket and looked at it. He thought of Ida and made his decision.

"I'm quitting," he said to the foreman.

When Schwartz asked where Sam was and the foreman said that he had quit, Schwartz looked bewildered.

"That's funny," he commented. "And I gave him a raise last week."

WITHOUT A JOB

Three hours later Sam didn't feel the same elation as he had experienced when he walked out of the Schwartz Lumber Co. He had to have a job, whether Ida came back or not, and jobs were few and far between. He didn't even dare go home for fear Ida would be there to face him, and he couldn't face her and tell her that he was out of work even if he could explain about the two dollars.

Finally, in one of the smaller offices, he saw a sign that attracted his attention. It told of a job that he thought he could fill and Sam called to the clerk.

"Experienced?" inquired the clerk.

"Sure," Sam answered, "I'll guarantee it."

With the card filled out, the clerk said, "This'll cost you two dollars."

Sam took the two dollars out of his pocket, unfolded them and passed them across the counter. He felt a touch on his arm and turned around to face Ida.

"Sam, are you out of work?" she demanded.

"Not now," he answered. "I got a new job. Listen, Ida, I can explain about that two dollars. It was——"

He didn't finish for there were tears in his wife's eyes.

"Then—then I won't have to get one," she said.

Sam grinned and shook his head. He got the card from the clerk and showed it to Ida.

"Look," he said. "Here's where I'm gonna be. I——"

He paused, blinking.

The card directed him to report to the Schwartz Lumber Co.

Come on up to the Height of health

YOU'VE enjoyed days where every minute was filled with the richness of living. You looked your best, and felt your best. Why not live more of these healthy, happy days?

One of the chief causes of poor health—and consequent unhappiness—is common constipation. It may bring headaches, loss of appetite and energy. Yet it can be overcome by eating a delicious cereal.

Laboratory tests show that Kellogg's ALL-BRAN provides "bulk" to gently exercise the intestines, and vitamin B to further aid regular habits. The "bulk" in ALL-BRAN is similar to that in leafy vegetables. One ounce of ALL-BRAN furnishes as much vitamin B as five ounces of orange juice. This delicious cereal also contains twice as much blood-building iron as an equal amount by weight of beef liver.

Two tablespoonfuls daily are usually sufficient. With each meal in chronic cases. If not relieved this way, see your doctor. Tests show ALL-BRAN does not lose its effectiveness with continued use. How different from pills and drugs—where dosage has to be constantly increased. Ask your grocer for the red-and-green package. Made by Kellogg in Battle Creek.

"When you're healthy, you're happy"
"How you feel — and how well you look — depends largely upon the food you eat. Be sure your diet is balanced — with sufficient 'bulk' to promote regularity."
W. K. Kellogg

"When [illegible] him again?" she asked. "Lunch time? [illegible] wonderful in [illegible] sport [illegible], Val. Why, it's all hand made, isn't it? How swell!"

MARJORIE "WAILS!"

"It's one Millie had. She gave me a dozen, at least. She had them, and she hates sport things. You can have some of them if you want. I'll never wear them all out."

"Hon! But oh, gee, now I'll have to make up something for Frank—He's so funny about somethings. He'd never let me take them if he knew. But we can say I found them at a bargain in Hamstein's basement or some place. Gee, I'm sick of being poor and never having anything like I used to have! He won't even let ma send me clothes. Makes me sick. You know, I think we were both fools to marry so young, Val. A girl is an awful sil to marry young, don't you think?"

Val, pale, with her dark lashed eyelids heavy, and circles of weariness under eyes, smiled faintly "You were young. I was pretty near 21. That isn't young."

"Oh, sure it is. A girl is a fool to—"

"I'm still a fool! I—I don't even know what I want. I'm in love with Les, and I'm still worried about Joe. I want to stay here, and I want to go back to my mother, because I'm worried about her. And I wired Aunt Julia last night, and I won't rest until I hear from her, and go back there to see for myself. Just when I really want to stay here with Les. I KNOW I'm a fool. But I can't help it. And oh, Margie—I'm so miserable!"

"I MUST BE TRAGIC"

Marjorie turned to wait for Frank, hurrying after them. Frank with his vest unbuttoned, his coat flying, his hat tilted just the way she'd told him dozens and dozens of times NOT to tilt it. Frank who wasn't anybody. Who'd never be anybody. Who gambled away a month's salary, and got maudlin drunk.

She looked down at her makeshift dress, her bargain basement pumps, her whole cheaply smart costume

And then she let her eyes rest on Val. Val, married to a successful architect, loved by the best looking man she ever knew. Val who looked like a fairy child, dressed in a princess' clothes . . .

"If you're miserable," she said, "I must be tragic!"

Millie wasn't home when they arrived, but the manager, remembering Val, let them in.

"Why," Marjorie said, "I thought she had scads of money!"

"She has—or will have. It's in litigation. Some fuss over Mr Harris' will. And Millie's like that. She'll economize on rooms, but she wants a lot of money to spend for things she wants."

"It isn't bad at that, hon. If I could have found a place as nice as this, I'd have taken it furnished instead of going into debt forever for our own things."

"Oh, Millie's places are always like this—always used to be, I mean, when I was little and she was poor. I don't know what she does. Just pulls things around and adds a bowl of flowers and a few pictures and it looks like a million dollars."

MILLIE DISTURBED

"Frankie, you make me SICK! Always in a rush when there's no hurry. I wanted to meet Val's mother!"

"You don't know when she'll be home! Come on, Margie. I'll let you have that money first chance I get, real soon, Val," he promised.

"Oh, that's all right," Val said.

It had taken nearly all the money she had to pay their bill at Agua Caliente, but after staying more than a week with Marjorie it was only fair that she should pay for their holiday . . . though it had cost far more than she had dreamed it could

Millie came in late, was surprised and embarrassed to find her daughter back and already in bed

"Val, darling, I'm so glad to see you! kiss me! But, darling, in bed already? It's EARLY! No, don't go, Bob! Bob, Val won't mind! You don't mind, do you dear?"

"No, just slip into a kimona. I'll push the bed up Sure you don't mind, Val, dear?"

Millie was gay, bubbling over with youth and good spirits, but Bob was restive. Plain to see that he was disappointed. Val was "the extra girl."

"DIET? NO"

When at last he had gone, and she could go back to bed, she lay in the dark, trying to think, to plan. If it was true, and Aunt Julia was really going to lose the house, something would have to be done. Some way would have to be found. . . .

"Don't you think Bob is cute? Val, you're awake, aren't you? Do you blame me for being so crazy about him?"

"No—he's awfully good looking, Millie."

Back her thoughts would move, in troubled sequence, to Aunt Julia, to Joe, to Joe's mother, to Les, and last night under the star . . .

"Val, Bob thinks I ought to go in pictures. Isn't that absurd? What do you think? Do you think I could take the screen tests?"

"You'd have to diet again."

"Diet! No, I wouldn't. I starved as long as I'm going to. Now I eat what I want to. Besides, Bob is funny that way. He doesn't like scrawny women. He says—Val, are you listening?"

Val forced herself back from the shadowy places where her thoughts had gone. "Yes—"

"He says I was painfully thin when he first met me—on shipboard. He says he made up his mind right then and there that he'd get me to stop dieting. He said: 'Child, you've got to put some flesh on your bones—' 'Child'—I suppose you think that's funny—for him to call me that."

"No. Oh, no, Millie."

MESSAGE FROM JULIA

"I wouldn't blame you if you did. Maybe I'm silly. But I never had the love I always dreamed of. I hoped and hoped, and each time I thought it had come, but it never did. And this time it's real—the real thing, Val. After all my unhappiness, real love at last. But you don't know. You can't know. You've been so lucky. You can't know what this means to me."

Val put her arms around Millie. Held her face close to hers in the dark. Millie . . . Millie never had the love she dreamed of . . . Then where, outside of story books, could you find it? Then what chance had she and Les?

"No — just crying," Val answered.

In the morning Aunt Julia's answer came. It was prepaid, and frugal, a night message

"I STILL HAVE THE HOUSE. DON'T WORRY. LET ME KNOW WHEN YOU ARE ARRIVING. SOONER THE BETTER FOR ME. COME AT ONCE IF YOU CAN.

"AUNT JULIA."

"Well, you can't go that's all," Millie said. "Tell her I said you couldn't. You came all the way out here to enjoy yourself. You were buried alive with her long enough."

"But, Millie, I told you that Mrs. Carey said she was going to lose the house, and you see she won't admit it. I'll have to go and find out. Why, she loves every inch of that little house of hers—every rose bush—every ugly old piece of furniture."

Millie's mobile mouth drooped in sympathy, and then she made [illegible]. "[illegible] me the chocolates, will you, Val? I'm sorry about that—that is if there's any truth in it. I'd help her out if I could, but you know I'm stony broke now. And, so's Bob. I can't do anything, and I don't see how you can."

MILLIE'S WARNING

Val thought of the money she had given Frank Vogel for their trip. "That's it. I've spent almost every nickel of what I had. But I have some money Joe invested in bonds for me. I could get that."

"You'd do nothing of the sort," Millie said almost shrilly. "If Joe Carey made you keep something, he has more sense than you have. Why, if I'd had money when I needed it . . . well . . . why go into that? I won't have you spending your last cent, Val. The time may come when you'll need it."

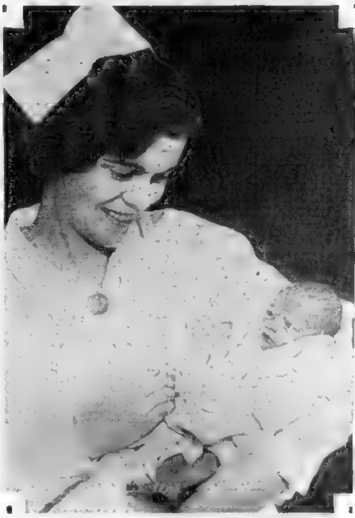
BORN AFTER MOTHER DIED



Medical science performed another of its miracles in Chicago the other day. Mrs. Pauline Fitzharris, 32, went to the office of Dr. Chester W. Trowbridge. She expected a baby in two months. While waiting for the doctor she suffered a heart attack that proved fatal. But 30 seconds after she died, the baby was born—thanks to a Caesarian operation. And here is the little one—healthy as can be—with Nurse Alice Deckstrom. (International News Photos.)

WILD CARGO

New Jungle Thriller by Author of "Bring 'Em Back Alive"

By FRANK BUCK with EDWARD ANTHONY

Here also were to be found the white-handed and silvery gibbon, the binturong (popularly known as the bear cat), the honey bear, the brush-tail porcupine, the red-crested green-wood partridge, the phython, the yellow-banded mangrove snake, the black cobra (known as the spitting cobra) and other important specimens.

I had standing orders for all these. Of the species mentioned I was particularly anxious to secure at least one good specimen of the spitting cobra, a dreaded demon known throughout the East as the implacable foe of all living creatures. Give it a chance and your reward for meeting this gruesome reptile will be twin jets of deadly amber-colored poison squirted at your eyes. It always shoots at its victim's eyes, and its aim is accurate at any range up to about four feet.

India and Malaya are full of conflicting stories as to what happens to you if this poison hits your optics. There are those who tell you that temporary blindness sets in, resulting in a serious and permanent impairment of vision.

During my many years as a collector I had sifted these various stories and had become pretty well convinced that the poison of the spitting cobra was not essentially different from that of the other species.

The morning after my arrival I took a walk with [illegible], accompanied by his [illegible] Airdale, to the stretch of jungle where the choppers were working. Ali joined us as we entered the clearing.

Sunddenly the wandering [illegible]kie, who had stopped beside a felled three, started barking furiously. It didn't take me long to know what it was all about. In the shadow of the fallen timber I could see a black cobra's head raised six inches off the ground, with hood spread.

Frantically Joe yelled to the dog in an effort to call him off. The reckless Binkie [illegible] where he was [illegible] with [illegible]

"Leave the snake to me, Joe," I said. "I know how to handle these brutes. You look after the dog. Maybe you can save him if you act quickly."

"Put on the gloves, Joe," I said. "Then you can get hold of his paws and keep them away from his face. If he scratches himself he's done for, you know."

Hoover Talking Tonight From Indiana

By N. F. T.

Musicians and artists of every character are in truth playing second fiddle these days it seems. Candidates for political office stand in there solid as favorite sons. Thus the situation holds until after election.

* * *

A whirlwind dash into mid-western territory consumes President Hoover today. Tonight he takes to the waves again from Indianapolis heard over NBC networks, including WEEI of Boston, from 8 30 to 9 30 p. m.

* * *

SIXTY-MINUTE SPEECH?

An hour is all the Republican rajahs have purchased, yet if the Chief Executive runs over his allotted time, as he has been wont to do during previous campaign speeches, his remarks shall be permitted to continue. Whereupon performers due to follow may take things easy and be paid just the same.

* * *

Tomorrow night brings the aggressive Socialist presidential nominee to Boston. Norman Thomas goes on New England air over WLOE at 8 30 p m. Mr. Thomas has been touring the West and South extensively and this coming down East tomorrow will wind up his campaigning, 'tis said.

DIALING DAY BY DAY

Jimmy (Still Hangin' On) Gallagher, popular Hub "mike" veteran, signed off the other night reminding listeners of his forthcoming "Valentine Party," but methinks maybe he meant "Halloween" . . . Who failed to enjoy "Tip" O'Neill interviewing Captain of Police John Anderson last evening (WNAC) on the current kidnaping menace? Pan-American Broadcasting Service is the name of the proposed new chain taking shape to rival NBC and CBS networks. There's a strong possibility that operation will get under way by February, 1933. Furthermore, certain Yankee Network outlets hereabouts are mentioned as becoming affiliated. If our authorized "colyum" spy in New York is calling his shots correctly, the combine has abundant Philadelphia capital to invest. No wonder directors of present major ozone outfits show such agitation with these rapidly-spreading rumors. They probably ponder in doubt over that old chestnut about competition being the life of trade.

MARKETS BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN BUSINESS

SHRINKAGE IS GENERAL; BUT CHANGE SURE

By B. C. FORBES

New York, Oct. 28. Remember that wheat can be produced more economically now than in the days of Queen Elizabeth. Maybe, therefore, it is not altogether astonishing that wheat prices are now where they were then. After all, is it illogical for wheat and almost every other agricultural commodity to sink in price as machinery for producing them advances?

If science invention and machinery don't make it possible to produce things at less cost and if they don't make it possible for the human race to live without working as many hours as formerly of what actual benefit are they?

The truth is that there is hardly a single commodity or raw material which cannot be provided today on a larger scale and at less cost than at the opening of this century. Our aptitude for unprecedented production has developed more rapidly than our ability to so manage things that the people can enjoy their use to the maximum extent.

SHARING WORK

Necessity is once again [illegible] the mother of invention. [illegible] Share-the-work movement is making genuine progress. Manifestly if there be a limit to the nation's total pay envelope it is preferable that as many breadwinners as possible share in it rather than that some should get a generous participation and others receive nothing.

Admittedly this means that the working classes carry a heavy part of the depression burden.

INVESTORS PAYING

[illegible] Consider what is happening to investors. [illegible] of billions of dollars of British Government bonds have [illegible] per cent return for 3½ per cent return. The French Government has embarked on a similar program of reducing the wages of its bond owners.

At home those who hold our Treasury notes for short period receive a return of approximately one per cent a year and obligations running for a longer period also offer relatively small income to purchasers. The owners of one American railway obligation which became due received not 100 cents on the dollar but 50 cents cash and the balance in securities. Another railroad offers owners of a maturing obligation 25 cents cash and the rest in notes.

Moreover a number of industrial and utility corporations have also scaled down their capitalization, some by giving stockholders only one share in place of several, others by drastically reducing the par values, still others by writing down their assets by millions, in one instance by more than $400,000,000. A good many banks and other institutions have also cut their capital structures.

In short the shrinkage process has become and is becoming general.

EXPANSION VIEWS

America and Americans have been so accustomed to expansion, expansion, expansion that the ordeal now being undergone is peculiarly distasteful and painful. Indeed it has generated an amount of pessimism not warranted by the long range view.

The shrinkage process will run its course and be followed by fresh expansion and prosperity.

Just how soon the more pleasant process will become pronounced no human can foretell. Some hopefully predict after election. Others expect no notable improvement until after March 4. Pessimists cannot foresee any turning point.

The truth is that at least a turning-point was reached around mid-year. Whether this will prove the turning point remains to be seen. So far recovery has on the whole persisted in a modest way.

Live News of Leaders Today in Wall Street

DULLNESS was the outstanding characteristic of the stock market today. There were times when a minute or so elapsed between quotations. Railroads attracted what there was of speculative attention, with expectations of a good car loading report to be made public tomorrow.

Nash Is Continued on a Profit Basis

Ability to bring about an equalization of expenses to the current volume of business is the primary reason why Nash Motors has been able to keep out of the red and to show consistent earnings through trying times, according to E. H. McCarty, president of the company.

The fact that Nash continued on a profitable basis during the third quarter of 1932 when the shrinkage in manufacturing volume for the three months represented only about one week's production totals during normal times is considered another striking demonstration of the remarkable control maintained over all operations by the close-knit executive organization.

Volume of Funds for Investment Growing

A growing volume of funds seeking investment in bonds of high caliber is forcing up prices of such issues and may soon bring about a substantial volume of new financing, according to banking observers. Uncertainty as to new government financing needs and plans owing to failure of the last Congress to balance the budget, remains the chief obstacle to a major revival of confidence in long-term bonds on the part of both institutional and private investors.

General Foods Sales Continue Upward Trend

General Foods Corp. for the quarter ended Stepember 30 is likely to show net profit slightly under 50 cents a share. This would bring net for nine months to close to $2 a share.

After reaching the lowest levels for the year in July sales and earnings turned upward in August and have continued their upward trend since then. Dollar sales volume this year has felt the adverse effect of price reductions as well as curtailed purchase power. Loss in volume, however, has been materially offset by drastic reductions in costs and expenses of all divisions.

Several new products have added the showing. Grapenut Flakes are now in national distribution, and sales are meeting unusual success.

Amateur Short Interest Grows

Material expansion in the so-called "amateur public short interest" in stocks is understood to have taken place during the past fortnight. A fairly sizeable portion of the increase followed declaration of the regular U. S. Steel preferred dividend in the hope that traditional liquidation on the good news would ensue. In past declining markets, important selling has greeted unexpected favorable developments. Inquiry among certain of the larger commission houses brought out that open short commitments carried for customers were the largest in several months and that the position was showing signs of temporary overcrowding.

Utilities Ignore Power Output Rise

Meagre attention paid by utility shares to the latest rise in electric power output covering the week of Oct. 22, suggests sponsors for the principal favorites in the group have no immediate aggressive plans in mind. The production statistics showed an increase of 1.4 per cent as compared with the preceding week, contrasted with a decline for the corresponding period of the two preceding years. A year ago the decline was half of 1 per cent. The improved current showing is subject to interpretation as evidence that improvement in business this fall has extended beyond the usual seasonal limit.

General Motors' Short Covering

Speculators who previously put out fresh short lines of General Motors covered on a light scale without producing much price rally. Most of the latest pressure is understood to have originated with the more aggressive professionals who persist in doubting the company's ability to continue the 25 cents quarterly common dividend under present circumstances.

Same Banking Sponsors as Steel

This belief takes full recognition, too, of the fact that the company's banking sponsors are identical with those of the U. S. Steel Corp. The Street leans to the opinion that a 10 cents quarterly payment is the most logical expectation. Meanwhile, some attention was attracted to reports that automobile manufacturers have virtually abandoned a proposed concerted drive for new business before the end of the year.

Delaware & Hudson Regular Dividend

Usual quarterly dividend of $1.50 just declared on Delaware & Hudson stock confirmed expectation that final net this year will come close to meeting the full requirement. More recent predictions based on eight months' operations were for earnings of around $5.75 for the 12 months.

How Distant Is Central Dividend?

Official disclosure of New York Central's floating indebtedness makes possible a logical survey of the dividend outlook for its stock. First and foremost, of course, there will have to be an extended period of profitable operations. Even allowing such a period, the road will naturally be required to eliminate its floating debt as an initial step toward dividends.

RAIL POSITION IS VIEWED AS IMPROVED

By FRANK H. MELOON

Most market observers see the position of our railroads improved following perusal of September earnings reports and such information as can be gleaned regarding October traffic. Rails in the best current position are listed by one keen student of the carriers as Atchison, Union Pacific, Delaware & Hudson, Northern Pacific, Chesapeake & Ohio and Norfolk & Western.

* * *

Railroad freight car loadings usually reach their peak around Oct. 1. This year October Saturdays have brought successive reports of new peaks. Tomorrow's report covering the week ended Oct. 22 should show no special change from that of the previous week.

* * *

Frank S. Davis

Plenty of authorities have been [illegible] of the financial structure of various railroads but it remained for Manager Frank S. Davis of the Maritime Association of Boston to call for complete reorganization of the Interstate Commerce Commission with a view to straightening out difficulties of railroads and solving our serious transportation problems. It would not do the waterways any good for the railroads to fail to carry out their share of the nation's transportation problems, Mr. Davis said in addressing the Atlantic Deeper Waterways Association.

Dispatch from Lincoln, Neb., states that the Nebraska Railway Commission, acting upon demand of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen, has ordered the Chicago & North Western Railway Co. to install a crew of five men, engineer, brakeman, conductor, fireman and flagman upon all its motor cars now being operated as substitutes for steam trains. The order does not appear in line with that which allows one-man operation of street cars.

About 5500 savings banks in 24 countries are uniting this year in sponsorship of international thrift day on October 31 as a symbol of peace and friendship. Mutual savings banks in the United States, with 13,000,000 depositors, sponsor the day in this country, while other savings banks in the rest of the world with 35,000,000 more depositors will join in the international observance.

The international movement organized to bring the savers of the world closer together, took shape in 1924 at the first International Thrift Congress held in Milan, Italy. Out of that meeting grew the International Thrift Institute which serves as a clearing house of ideas and information for the savings institutions of the world.

Note that the Ipswich Mills of Ipswich were sold at auction to E. Benjamin Currier of Ipswich for $13,000. Property was once appraised at $800,000. Other big mills which have outlived their local usefulness to capital are slated to be had at similar write-downs.

STATE ST. Hears:

That share prices continue to edge forward in a reassuring manner. Nothing spectacular is either expected or desired. If the list is really laying a foundation capable of supporting a strong upward movement considerable backing and filling is necessary. Shorts are advised to be open minded as to the possibility this is happening at a level which could easily mark the limit of a secondary reaction in a bull market.

Picking a Turn

There is nothing more hazardous in speculative affairs than picking a turn from bear to bull market. This is due to the unavoidable fact that each and every downturn could prove to be the first corrective reaction in a primary bull market.

Two courses of examination are open to the financial observer. First, isolated trade trends can be analysed and, secondly, the behavior of stock prices can be scrutinized. Trade trends were examined here in some detail weeks ago and it was decided improvement was more than seasonal.

The action of equity prices, as shown by the Dow-Jones averages were also closely followed and the impression gained was one of moderate bullishness. Average prices simply did not conform to the bear pattern. But the real test is approaching and the final decision cannot yet be rendered.

Telephone

The telephone dividend is already being counted out by the bears . . . Not quite out perhaps but the self appointed referees are sure it is on its way out at least and they have arbitrarily cut the rate to $7 or thereabouts . . . Their reasons are not very sound.

By now they should realize that the large American corporations with surpluses use the funds piled up in good years to tide them over in poor times . . . And of all companies Telephone has the firmest policy . . . Its dividend rate was set to obviate the need of lean.

American Telephone could dip into surplus for $4 a share and still show a total surplus of around $500,000,000 . . . It does not sound reasonable to say that the company officials will be free of political influence and may cut the dividend if their suspected favorite loses.

Bendix Aviation Change Is Planned

Special meeting of stockholders of Bendix Aviation Corp. will be held at South Bend Nov. 17 to vote on a resolution reducing capital to $10,488,315 from $52,441,575 and accordingly reducing capital represented by each share of issued stock to $5 from $25 and transferring $41,953,260 from capital stock account to capital surplus account. Stockholders will also be asked to vote on changing no-par common to $5 par.

N. E. POWER NET $10,800,848

New England Power Association reports for the third quarter of 1932 a consolidated balance before reserves and common dividends of $1,125,801 as compared with $1,257,645, in the corresponding period of 1931.

Although gross earnings declined from $13,130,777 in the third quarter of 1931 to $12,023,058 in this year's third quarter, better water conditions and operating economies offset this reduction to a very large extent.

Figures for the 12 months ending Sept. 30, 1932 show gross earnings of $52,954,223, a decrease of $2,856,505. Consolidated net income for reserves and dividends was $10,800,848, a decrease of $749,435.

Preferred dividends were $4,[illegible]764, an increase of $22,395. This left a balance for reserves and common dividends of the association in the 12 month period of $6,795,083, a decrease of $771,831.

SPECTATOR Says:

Perhaps the drop of $81,000,000 in brokers' loans will stimulate a little enthusiasm today. Wheat, however, is still important, and will either have to stabilize or stocks will have to break away from its influence to do better.

One cheerful bit of news was given by a bond man, who said the leading insurance companies are buying bonds quite liberally again. Insurance companies generally have been hanging on to their cash for quite a while.

Baltimore & Ohio

We have it on good authority that the veteran Loree has been doing some accumulating in Baltimore & Ohio. The road's his old favorite. 'Tis also said B. & O. will get the R. F. C. loan soon to help it with its big maturity March 1. Announcement is expected next week.

This may help, since postponement of this some time ago had a bad effect on the market. With traffic keeping up the way it has, October railroad reports should be even better than September's.

Louisville and Nashville's report, we are told, will be down a little from a year ago for September, but October will be very much better. The road has been having a big coal movement, and is reported to have had to borrow cars to keep up with it. While consumers' stocks had been low, 'tis said more liberal credit terms to dealers have had a lot to do with the big increase in coal traffic.

Funds Freely Offered

We understand some of the big banks are trying to put their money to work by inducing big depositors to buy securities, offering funds freely for this purpose.

Properly margined, of course, since business at present can't take a fraction of all this money around, this would be another way of getting some of it to work.

NARROW PRICE CHANGES RULE FOR LEADERS

New York, Oct. 28—Narrow price changes were the rule for most leaders in today's trading on the New York Stock Exchange.

Gains of 1 to 1¼ points were temporarily registered in Atchison, Union Pacific, Southern Pacific, Northern Pacific, Lackawanna and New York Central, but these gains were mostly cut to fractions later.

INTEREST IN RAILS

Prices pushed up a point or two here and there during the morning, but slid back by the middle of the day, as professional traders found they were attracting no following.

Such speculative interest as there was seemed to center in the rails.

Rail liens were in favor in the bond division.

"On the basis of car loadings this month my guess is that October gross will be somewhat above September," said President Storey of the Atchison System.

He declined to express an opinion as to the probable trend of traffic and revenues for the balance of the year.

Lackawanna Railroad Co. has ordered 4000 tons of 130-pound steel rails for January delivery. This is the second small rail order placed since steel companies reduced the price of rails—the first, amounting to 6000 tons, having come from Illinois Central Railroad. When the steel producers last week lowered their price to $40 a ton from $43, it was expected that some good-sized rail orders would be placed by the carriers.

RESERVE FIGURES PLEASE

Wall St. found the weekly Federal Reserve reports, indicating a further piling up of excess reserves of member banks, return of currency from hoarding, and continued inflow of gold, decidedly encouraging as to basic financial conditions, but stock market quarters were imbued with the feeling that the autumn upturn in general business might be reaching its seasonal peak, and were uncertain as to the trend of the market over the remainder of the year.

There was some talk in brokerage quarters, however, of probable increased technical strength of the market, as a result of the sharp reduction in brokers' loans, and increased short selling recently.

Another idea was that the $18,000,000 drop in brokers' loans was due to repayment of loans previously arranged to carry government bond purchases.

Weekly mercantile reviews indicated that retail trade had felt the effects of adverse weather conditions during the past week, and that wholesale business was feeling the lull of a between-season period, but pointed to encouraging indications of further gradual gains in manufacturing activity, and increases in employment.

A renewed decline in wheat had considerable influence in restricting trading, and volume fell back to the lows of the week.

Activity fell to a minimum with the ticker pausing two and three minutes between quotations at times.

Auburn was a strong spot as a demonstration was made against the shorts who had sold the stock in anticipation of its poor third quarter report. The stock at one time was pushed up more than 2 points.

Foreign exchanges held steady. Demand sterling was $3.28⅛. Lire, 5.11¾ cts. Franc, 3.93 15-16 cts.

New Bond Issues of Week Smaller

New York, Oct. 28 (AP)—New bond issues offered in this district this week aggregated $1,544,000 compared with $8,435,000 in the preceding week. In the like 1931 period there were no new bond issues placed on the market. Corporation bonds and notes falling due in November are estimated at $51,395,910 compared with $111,794,590 in October and $52,094,000 in November, 1931.

Net for National Distillers Is Up

National Distillers Products Co. today reports for nine months ended September 30 profit of $405,465 after interest and depreciation, but before federal taxes, compared with $376,516 in first nine months of 1931.

Gilt-Edged Issues in London Easier

London, Oct. 28—Gilt-edged issues on the stock exchange here closed easier today. Industrials, oils and transatlantics finished steady. Paris prices, on the eve of a four-day holiday, closed little changed. Berlin finished soft.

Follansbee Plans New $335,000 Mill

Pittsburgh, Oct. 28—Follansbee Bros. Co. will begin construction immediately on a new strip mill for its Follansbee, West Virginia, plant. Estimated cost is $335,000.

Dividends

Buckeye Pipe Line Co. declared a dividend of 75 cents, payable December 15 to stock of record November 18. Similar payment was made three months ago.

* * *

Hudson & Manhattan Railway declared a semi-annual dividend of $1.25 on the common, payable December 1 to stock of record November 15. Previously $1.75 semi-annually was paid.

* * *

Income Is Secured by Retirement Annuity

By FRANK F. LOOMIS

The retirement annuity policy was issued by life insurance companies to meet the need of men and women who have no accumulated savings but desire to lay aside a definite sum from year to year and thus purchase a life income to begin at a selected age.

There are, of course, various retirement annuity contracts written, differing somewhat in detail but accomplishing the same purpose, i.e., "a guaranteed income for life in later years."

The policy described below is sold in units of $100 of yearly premium, the income beginning at age 50, 55, 60, 65 or 70, as the insured elects. The contract provides:

A guaranteed monthly income for life beginning at retirement age selected. In case the policyholder dies before the date when income payments are to begin, the beneficiary will receive at least as much as the premiums that have been paid in, or if the cash value at the time is a greater amount, such amount will be paid in place of a return of the premium money.

If death occurs after retirement date and before the full amount of the cash value at maturity has been received by the policyholder, the payments will be continued as an income to the beneficiary until the difference has been made up.

At any time after premiums have been paid for one full year, the contract may be surrendered for cash, or the insured may borrow an amount not exceeding the cash value.

There is also a provision whereby at any time after the first year a paid-up deferred annuity will be granted instead of cash value, if desired. Under this arrangement, no further premiums are paid but the life income begins at retirement age for a smaller amount, depending on the number of premiums that were paid while the policy was in force.

The policy participates in the dividend earnings of the company, which may be taken in cash, applied towards the premiums, or left to accumulate with interest to increase the cash value at maturity or to increase the life income. No medical examination is required.

Under the above plan, a man age 30, for a yearly premium of $100, can receive a life income of $32.03 a month beginning at age 60; or for a yearly premium of $250, a savings of approximately $5 a week, the monthly income would be $80.08.

STEEL TO WRITE VALUE DOWN

New York, Oct. 28 (INS)—The United States Steel Corporation is working on a plan to bolster earnings by reducing annual depreciation charges on the company's properties, it is learned exclusively today.

This reduction is to be obtained through writing down the value of the company's plants as carried in the annual balance sheet.

The operation is purely one of bookkeeping, but it will free for earnings annual charge-offs of approximately $24,000,000 at last year's rate of depreciation, or about $20,000,000 this year, if plant values are written down only 50 per cent.

This saving would about take care of the corporation's preferred dividends. These amount to slightly in excess of $25,000,000 annually.

This change in depreciation charges is understood to have been one of the considerations in the payment of the regular preferred dividend this week, besides the political angle.

If United States Steel goes through with this plan, as it now seems assured, other corporations, not only in the steel industry but also in other lines, will follow. Big Steel, with its Morgan-dominated board, is regarded as a criterion on corporation procedure.

Already two important corporations have actually taken the step. United Fruit earlier this month announced a 50-million cut in book values of properties, with an expected saving on depreciation charges this year of nearly five million dollars.

Union Carbide last year figured building costs had dropped 2. per cent and wrote down book values of its properties 40 millions to more closely approximate present replacement values.

Relative Gain Is Kept Up by Carbon

New York, Oct. 28—Profit of United Carbon Co. for third quarter is estimated by management on basis of preliminary figures at between $30,000 and $35,000 after depreciation and depletion, but before federal taxes. While this represents a moderate decline from $42,369 in the second quarter, it continued the record of improvement relative to last year. In third quarter of 1931 there was a net loss of $39,741.

Financial position also is understood to have been further strengthened during the quarter, bank loans having been reduced to $550,000 and ratio of current assets to current liabilities increased to substantially better than four to one.

Pierce-Arrow Has $634,414 Net Loss

New York, Oct. 28—Pierce-Arrow Motor Car Co. and subsidiaries for the September quarter report a net loss of $634,414 after depreciation, interest, taxes, etc., as against a net loss of $878,800 in the previous quarter and a net loss of $195,277 in the September quarter of last year.

Net loss for the nine months was $1,706,748, as against a net profit of $226,435, equal to $3.16 a share on 71,500 shares of 6 per cent preferred in the first nine months of the previous year.

Bankers Discussing Investors' Outlook

By MERRYLE S. RUKEYSER

White Sulphur Springs, W. Va., Oct. 2—The sponsors of the billions of outstanding stocks and bonds, some of which have gone sour during the depression, sought at their 21st annual convention held here this week to delve into the causes of the disappointments of investors.

To the credit of the members of the Investment Bankers' Association, its committees were in a realistic fact facing mood, and there was no attempt to gild the lily. In the spirit of mutual help, the makers and fashioners of securities, in a chastened mood, sought to formulate the mistakes of the last boom and to avoid repeating them in the future. With this idea they foreswore high pressured sales and merchandising methods and indicated that in the future they would seek to render individual professional investment service to each customer. They also recognized abuses in competitive bidding for new issues, especially foreign ones. Perhaps there will be a very human tendency to deviate from this austere standard and to seek to find sound mass methods when the lay investors, now dormant, again develop an appetite for new issues other than those of the very highest grade.

Now, after the day of reckoning has come, the bankers, as they look at the wreckage, wonder what was wrong. Though at the convention this week a few specific abuses were uncovered, it seems to me that the assembled financiers neglected to emphasize the basic cause of the collapse.

In sponsoring new issues, especially of bonds and preferred stocks, the issuing house in their general thinking and sales presentation presupposed greater economic stability at home and abroad than was actually realized in the last three years. With the benefit of hindsight we all know now that we are living in a highly erratic, widely fluctuating and speculative economy society, and that under such conditions of tumultuous flux only the nimble speculator, who has been adroit in shifting his position, has been able to maintain or augment his relative position. Behind a multitude of individual defaults and troubles lays the collapse of the international price level, and the changing real worth of the dollar and other units of gold currency.

Sales Decline Is Checked

New York, Oct. 28 (AP)—September department store sales in the second Federal Reserve district, embracing New York, New Jersey and Connecticut, represented the smallest decline in the daily average since January, the Nov. 1 monthly review of the Federal Reserve agent at New York reports. Totals September sales of the leading apparel stores were only 12½ per cent below a year ago as compared with a 22 per cent decline in August.

Pennroad Holders Unite

New York, Oct. 28 (AP)—Formation of a committee of holders of stock of the Pennroad Corporation was announced today by Daniel W. Blumenthal, its counsel. He said that the group would study the receivership action brought against the company in the chancery court in Delaware, but that it was in no way connected with this move.

Massachusetts Investors Changes Par

Approval has been given by shareholders of Massachusetts Investors Trust to proposed change from no-par to $1 par value for the shares of beneficial interest. This change in no way affects the asset value or the dividend policy of the trust.

Baldwin Estimate Is Given

Philadelphia, Oct. 28—Although business handled by Baldwin Locomotive Works and affiliated companies this year may be only approximately half that for 1931, it is anticipated the loss accrued to Baldwin will be about the same as for 1931, due to substantial reductions in operating costs and many economies. For 1931 loss accrued to Baldwin, as shown by consolidated statement of profit and loss, was $4,122,759.

MATHIESON HAS SHARP GAIN

Business of Mathieson Alkali Works so far in October has shown sharp improvement over September, continuing the upward trend since the low in July. Improvement in textile and rayon industries which started late in the summer began to be reflected in September operations and has been continued into October.

The most important single factor has been revival of sales of caustic soda to the rayon industry. Practically all rayon mills has been closed down for several months in the summer, but most have been operating at capacity the past month or so. Continuation of this caustic business seems assured at least until end of the year, as rayon plants have sufficient business in view to continue at a high rate of activity for several months.

The textile trade (particularly silk mills) has reduced operations somewhat the past two weeks, now that the fall retail demand has been supplied. This business, however, is not so important to Mathieson as the rayon industry.

Mathieson's net third quarter was $126,409 after deducting $285,480 for depreciation and depletion, equal after preferred dividends to 13 cents a share on 650,436 shares of common. As stated in the president's report, September accounted for about half the quarter's profits, or roughly $60,000. On this basis, since October is running well ahead of September, profit in the final three months may be about $180,000 or $200,000, or at about the same level as in the first and second quarters.

Colonial Beacon Report Is Issued

Colonial Beacon Oil Co., Inc., controlled by Standard Oil Co. of New Jersey reports for nine months ended Sept. 30, 1932, net loss after all charges, including interest and depreciation, of $1,830,371 against $1,881,029 net loss in the corresponding 1931 nine months.

Indicated by comparison of the half-year and nine months' statements, net loss for the quarter ended Sept. 30, 1932, was $709,565, compared with $17,009 in the same 1931 three months.

Granite City Steel Net Is 3 Cts. a Share

Granite City Steel Co. today reports for the nine months ended Sept. 30 net profits of $9072, equal to three cents a share, compared with $292,347, or $1.16 a share, in the first nine months of 1931. For the quarter ended Sept. 30 net profit was $19,906, eqqual to 7 cents a share, compared with $27,063, or 9 cents a share, in the preceding quarter and $96,067 or 33 cents a share in the September quarter of the preceding year.

Index of Business Shows Slight Drop

Preliminary index of general business activity for the week ended October 22 was 54.5, compared with the revised index of 55.4 for the previous week, according to the Business Week.

THE VOICE OF BROADWAY

By LOUIS SOBOL

"And Cabbages and Kings"

And so I went to the premiere of the new Cotton Club show up Harlem way, Sunday night, and marked down on my note pad that good time was had by all, including myself. Cotton Club shows—the opening nights at least—have always held a peculiar allure for me, chiefly because I know in advance I'm going to have a noisily good time. I've even gotten to a point now where I can tolerate the fog-horn voiced Lethia Hill and her bawdy ditties and am not too much annoyed at the so-called artistic dances of the lifeless-faced Henri Wessels. This time, the aesthetic Wessels leaps out on the floor, bare to the waist and presents a neat but not gaudy body dabbed with black, unsightly blotches of paint. He jumps and crouches, he twists and writhes, he tosses his hands this way and that way, all by way of a terrifically symbolical dance which nobody understands but which impressed several ladies to the right and left of me and I suppose that's answer enough.

No, I can't say I enjoy Wessels very much, but when Alda Ward sings in that peculiar treble of hers, when the amazingly agile and youthful Nicholas Brothers, grinning from ear to ear, strut their wild routine, when the versatile, scat-singin' Cab Calloway, hi di hi-ing, as he prances and jigs in front of his orchestra or saunters out to the center of the floor in his turtle-necked sweater and begins chanting a low-down sepian blues fashioned for him by Messrs. Ted Koehler and Harold Arlen, then I begin to understand why Cotton Club shows appeal to me. This time, Mr. Calloway wailed and whined out something to do with the woes and joys of the "Reefer Man" (reefers, for the uninitiated, are cigarettes packed with marijuana), but strangely enough, there was no "Minnie, the Moocher" song. To date, Minnie has kicked the gong around and Minnie has had her wedding day. I had expected that on this occasion, the Messrs. Koehler and Arlen, through their interpreter, Calloway, would have acquainted us with the welfare of Minnie's Pickininnies, or perhaps have blasted Minnie's marital status.

Half the fun at Cotton Club openings are the people who attend. After the show, the extreme suave Dan Healy steps out on the floor and after pleading for a nice hand for everybody connected with the show from Herman Stark, the manager, down to Kid Griffin, the head waiter, looks carefully around the room, assumes his most genial smile and begins announcing names of celebrities present. It's a pernicious custom—but it's always get the most applause. always get the most applaus. They're not crazy—when their names are announced; they don't leap to their feet at once. They just sit. The laymen keep applauding. Reluctantly, the star rises and smiles graciously. More applause. Someone shouts (usually someone at the star's table) "Make 'im get up and sing." The response is terrific. The star shakes his head, sadly. He takes two or three bows and then waits nervously to see how the applause accorded to his rival will compare with his own.

An idea of the stars who take bows at the Cotton Club opening Sunday night. Lou Holtz, a comedian. Helen Morgan, a lachrymose warbler. Sally O'Neill, a chipper screen and stage star. Burns and Allen, radio and vaudeville comedians. Paul Muni, versatile screen and stage character man. Eugenie Leontovitch, an emotional actress. Milton Berle, a comic, and Richy Craig, Jr., a comic. Bill Robinson, a dancer, and Belle Baker, a singer. Also half a dozen newspapermen, three lawyers, two producers. It's all so very, very gay!

You might think, with all the books on newspapermen and all the plays and all the pictures on newspapermen, there wouldn't be anyone in this city above the age of five who didn't know all about the inside and outside of a newspaper office. Well, Arnold Reuben, who sells sandwiches to some of the best newspapermen in town, has vague ideas about our craft. Extremely vague. Arnold, excited, met us at the doorway of his establishment as we were about to enter and, after he caught his breath, spluttered, "The city desk called. So and so's (a prominent gent of the racketeering profession) body was found in the river at 145th st." . . . "What city desk called, Arnold?" we asked patiently. "What did it want?" . . . "I don't know—the city desk—they asked if any columnist or reporter was around" . . . "Well, was it the city desk of the Journal or the city desk of the American of the Mirror—what city desk?" . . . Reuben looked puzzled. "I thought there was only one city desk—you know—lot of times they call up and ask if anybody is here." With infinite patience I explained to Arnold that the city desk was not the Associated Press or the United Press, or even the New York Times, but that it meant the city editor or any of his assistants, and that there were as many city desks in Manhattan as there were newspapers, a bit of information which impressed Mr. Reuben no end, for he refused to let me pay for my cup of coffee.

There seems to be some hitch connected with the announced possession of the Casino Theater, once the Earl Carroll, by George White. I had taken it for granted that the papers had already been signed but one of those fellows who claims to be "on the in"—there is always one of them around, insists that the papers haven't been signed and that A. C. Blumenthal is not only in possession but intends to stay in possession and has had either two or four gendarmes in uniform stationed around the premises to keep Mr. George White from coming in. I walked over to the Casino last night and saw a few cops there but whether they were assembling for a pinochle game or for the purpose of shooing Mr. White away, I can't tell you with any degree of accuracy, and I was unable to get into touch with Mr. Blumenthal in Philadelphia, but if it's true that Mr. Blumenthat has hired policemen to keep Mr. White out, I think it's a lot of fun and if it isn't true, then the gentleman who's "on the in" is just a liar and it serves me right for placing any faith in him.

Gossip About People You Know

BACON ALL ATTENTION

Any time, Gaspar Bacon is relaxing, and you'd like to see him snap to attention, turn the conversation to the science of government. The moment the subject is brought up he becomes deadly serious. At present he is giving plenty of thought to the serious unemployment problems which seem in prospect for the coming winter, although his functions are not so vitally linked with that subject. He has told friends that there is no dodging this question. Everyone in power must devote attention to the matter.

1—The five billion dollar loan to relieve unemployment and put billions of dollars into immediate circulation.

A Real American

Honoring Henry Cabot Lodge

A statue of Henry Cabot Lodge which shall perpetuate his memory so long as mortal life exists has been unveiled on the State House grounds.

It is well.

Let us say in perfect frankness that the Boston Evening American did not approve the viewpoint of Henry Cabot Lodge as a whole on the domestic issues of the country.

But any differences of thought which did exist can be swept aside in the tribute which his unfailing devotion to his country in international affairs justly demands.

Lodge was a great American. He thought in terms of America.

He would not have the aliens fortify Magdalena Bay and become a menace to his country's safety any more than he would permit his beloved country to be enmeshed in the troublesome and utterly dangers machinations of the League of Nations and the League Court.

By his leadership of the battle against the League of Nations, he performed a service to his country which ranks with the finest statesmanship of all time.

To your memory as a great American citizen and statesman, Henry Cabot Lodge, we offer this meed of praise to which you are richly entitled.

Placid Redheads

And a Few Other Things

A pair of Columbia professors—Drs. Otis W. Caldwell and Gerhard E. Lundeen—in a recent study of popular superstitions puncture some of mankind's most firmly grounded beliefs.

They tell you that—

1. Red-haired persons are not necessarily quick tempered.
2. Brains and beauty usually go together.
3. High brows don't mean superior intelligence.
4. If you are born dumb, nothing can make you brilliant.
5. Blondes are as trustworthy as brunettes.
6. Slender, sensitive hands don't indicate artistic ability.
7. A square jaw does not mean will-power.

The two Columbia savants proceed to prove all these things scientifically—to their own satisfaction at least. And very likely they are right. Even professors are right now and then.

However, it makes no difference if they are.

Roosevelt, 2½ to 1

Those Are the Odds Today

Betting odds on the election interest you, whether you bet or not.

Roosevelt supporters, therefore, will be pleased to hear that their candidate is still a 2½ to 1 favorite over Mr. Hoover—and Hoover supporters, presumably, will be correspondingly depressed.

Other bets reported at 2 to 1 were that Hoover would lose Ohio, Indiana and Illinois and would carry Pennsylvania. He was also a 6 to 5 favorite to carry Massachusetts.

Still others:

Six to 5 that Roosevelt carries New York State; 2 to 1 that he carries California; 7 to 5 that he carries California by 100,000 votes; 7 to 5 that Lehman wins and that Wagner is re-elected, and 2 to 1 that McAdoo is elected in California.

Betting is hardly an infallible test of what will happen. But with the campaign near its windup it is perhaps as reliable as any other and superior to most.

Holland's 'Rhode Island'

Reclaimed from the Sea

Holland, which lost New York nearly 300 years ago, will soon add a slice of land to its territories as large as the State of Rhode Island. And it will do this without discovering it, buying it or conquering it.

The new land is the bed of the Zuider Zee, the inland sea of the Netherlands. Dutch engineers have just completed an 18-mile dike, separating it completely from the North Sea. Part of the Zuider will be left as a lake, but most of it will be pumped dry and the land made into farms.

The thrifty Dutch will thus increase the area of their country 7 per cent and their arable land 10 per cent. As the population is growing rapidly the additional ground will come in handy.

This country, fortunately, still has land to spare, and will have for many years. But if the time ever comes when our population is crowded for elbow room we may take a leaf out of Holland's book. Draining the Great Lakes would add a territory half as large as Germany, and it is not beyond the resources of engineering to do it.

'It's Just Around the Corner'

It was this very Elephant,
The well-known G. O. P.,
Who said: "Around the corner, folks,
There is Prosperity."

And "Down and Out" is what is meant
By that sign on the wall.

Day by Day on the Atlantic

Ship's Gala

AT SEA, Oct. 28—A ship's gala, held next to last night at sea, marks the end of the voyage. From then on you pack. All the gala passengers luxuriate silk-shod in Paris finery. All but the ultra sedate let themselves go—blooey, blooey! And breakfast sometimes becomes a hiccupy blur.

Entertainment is frequently of high order—featuring artists on way to fill engagements in America or abroad. They are inspired by that generous applause that comes to those who give of their art gratis. Even the mediocre performer is assured a great big huzzah.

At our gala was an extraordinary illusionist whose full evening dress was the most perfect fit since Billy Gaxton's last first night. A swaggering lady, with a Leonore Ulric husk in her voice, did some amazing juggling interpolated by low comedy falls. A seedy tenor sang the Pagliacci thing.

Emil Boreo, who originated "The March of the Wooden Soldiers" in Chauve Souris, was on the bill. Here is a fellow incongruously lost in his own versatility. I know of no entertainer with such finished talents. Yet one rarely sees him save in cafes or at such ship affairs.

Too, there was the inevitable toe-dancer, chaperoned by a typical stage mama. It is her night of nights, for she can run through her entire repertoire and be certain of a reception that may never come again. There's something wistfully pathetic about lesser toe-dancers of the world.

Our steward came excitedly this morning as we neared Newfoundland's banks. He pointed starboard, and we saw in ghostly radiance a jagged mountain of powdery white, sombre, foreboding. As we came nearer, perhaps within three miles, it proved a liner's greatest terror—a floating iceberg. Out of thin mist it boggled a moment in a burst of sunshine, a glistening Gargantuan of the deep. And there was a subtle heart-pluck and the suspicion of a choke when, through glasses, we saw a valiant outrider of the ice patrol with the Stars and Stripes in gallant flutter.

Late yesterday, although I missed it, a school of whales disported, as is their custom, in a sun westerning high on the horizon. I've always wanted to sight a leader, rough old whaler that I am, and shriek: "Thar' she blows and sperm at that!"

* * *

Few sports are so entrancing as the bright blur of a liner's dining room with a meal in full swing. There is the savor of richly spiced food, the tingle of full-bodied wine and that burst of elegance that follows extravagant shopping abroad. The glummest men suddenly become silken-voiced courtiers and glacial ladies warm and vivifying in a bristling air of elation.

One may order at will from the ambrosial fare. Caviar frais de Riga, consomme froid et creme de petit pois, supreme de sole, perdreaux en cocotte, asperges, medaillon de fois gras, coeur de laitue and biscuit glace et corbeille! But it's not quite fair. They should slip in a pork chop or a corn pone here and there as a sop to the skillet folk and the country jake trade.

On the prow tonight, a shipboard acquaintance, a husband who left his wife home, stood mooning as we plunged toward port. He seemed trembly. "You need an overcoat," I suggested. He replied: "I'm not chilly." And after a silence added: "I suppose I am merely shaking off regrets." Paree! Paree!

So long out of touch with the business side of life, my dominant anxiety was naturally for news of improvement. So in a wireless telephone talk with Jimmy Lanehart, dean of the ship scribes, nearing Quarantine, I inquired. He was non-committal, but upon my insistence, and as a modicum of cheer, announced: "I hear things took a jump at the Flea Circus last week!"

Listen, World!

By Elsie Robinson

The "Mean-Well" Pests

THE PEOPLE who raise 57 varieties of Cain—

And then crawl out of it by saying they "meant well"—

Elsie Robinson

I can stand a fool, being plenty of one myself.

I can forgive a crook, having made a few messes on my own.

I can even endure hypocrites, liars, snobs, parasites and bullies. These pests usually are so self-evident that one can protect oneself against their malice and blundering.

But there's absolutely no protection against the menace of a human being who seems to be sensible and civilized, yet who may, at any moment, run amuck to gratify some idiotic impulse.

Occasional lapses like this may be excused; but there are people who make a regular career of it.

Wherever there's a difficult or delicate situation, one may find them hovering round; and if there isn't a difficult or delicate situation, they create one.

They tell you all the mean things people have been saying about you, "for your own good."

They arrange to have you meet people whom you've avoided for years, saying "I just know you'll be crazy about each other, dear!"

They spill the beans, and spoil your perfect alibis, just when you think you've got everything fixed up pretty.

In short, they're always throwing a monkey wrench into the machinery, and then excusing themselves, or being excused, because they "meant well."

But I wonder if that should be accepted as an excuse?

Suddenly the perpetrator of that act became possessed of a certain impulse. That impulse seemed delightful to him. It tickled his vanity and excited his sense of adventure to yield to it.

Of course, he shouldn't have yielded to an act involving another person simply to tickle or excite himself. He should have considered the other fellow's feelings. He should have stopped to think of the effect on the other fellow's life.

But such delay and consideration involved irksome self-control, and he didn't like to exercise self-control. He wanted to do things when he wanted to do them, so he went ahead and did them—and the unfortunate other fellow paid the price.

And then the culprit crawled out of the mess by saying that he "meant well."

BUT HE DIDN'T MEAN WELL!

HE MEANT SIMPLY TO DO THE THING HE WANTED, REGARDLESS OF CONSEQUENCES, AND THAT WAS ANYTHING BUT "WELL."

For if we won't think about the consequences of our acts, then we're no better than savages. If we won't consider the other fellow's rights we're as ruthless as murderers, no matter how delightful our impulse appears to ourselves.

So I'm all for putting leg-irons on blundering egotists who go around raising the devil and then chirping that they "meant well."

Unless, of course, the blundering egotist happens to be myself. Then, of course, it's different!

Just Folks

Fault-Seeing

'Tis strange the faults in him I see,
No great attraction hold for me.
Tempted by them I'd scarcely be.

I wonder since it is so plain
Why he will dice with loss and pain
So trivial a joy to gain.

That which he counts exquisite bliss
To win, and anguish keen to miss,
To me intolerable boredom is.

Ah, well, I have my weakness, too,
He wonders at the things I do.

I think his follies shouldn't be.
He looks my way, but cannot see
The follies which appeal to me.

Volstead Repeal Issue: Cannon for Hoover

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

AS WE APPROACH the close of the campaign the drift toward Roosevelt gains in momentum, and life-long Republicans are enlisting under his banner. This week Senator Hiram Johnson, running mate of Theodore Roosevelt in 1912 and a militant progressive all his life, takes the stump for another Roosevelt in California. It would be stupid to discount his influence in California.

One Charles Evans Hughes did that in 1916. The California Senator goes to Roosevelt because no real progressive can do otherwise, without playing hide-and-seek with his conscience.

It is nothing less than a slaughter when as many as five Republican Senators of the progressive school openly espouse the Roosevelt cause. Three of these are on the stump. Senator Borah, refusing to stultify himself, is maintaining a deadly silence. When in generations has anything like this been seen before?

Senator Capper's Statement

This general attitude of the West makes all the more remarkable Senator Capper's obsequious and sophisticated support of Mr. Hoover. The Kansas Senator, making his money on the farmers through his farm paper, is entirely satisfied with what the Hoover Administration has done to agriculture; and this ought to be of interest to his subscribers.

Bunk seems an inevitable ingredient of a Hoover plea. Thus Capper has the effrontery to say that "taxes are coming down." It is incredible that any member of Congress should make a statement so notoriously at war with the truth. For Senator Capper knows that the highest taxes ever levied in times of peace have failed to balance the budget; he knows that we are now piling up an appalling deficit; and he knows perfectly well that taxes are going up to meet this new deficit.

But the most bunkish statement of Senator Capper is this:

"Hoover is a Western man in sympathy with Western interests. Roosevelt has lived all his life in New York. He does not know the West. I see no reason for voting a Western man out of the White House to put an Eatern man in."

* * *

West Is Stampeding to Roosevelt

It is sheer bunk to refer to Mr. Hoover as a Western man. He left the West when he had barely attained his majority; he did not even stop in the East; he went on to England and under the British flag he lived during the greater part of his mature manhood. He never went back to his beloved West until in his middle forties when he was aspiring for office. He has not actually lived in the West more than six months since he left it as a boy. His "sympathy" with the agricultural West has been demonstrated by his indifference and hostility in office. There is no reason why a promoter in the mining industry in China, India, Australia and South Africa should be familiar with, or interested in, the problems of the American West. Mr. Hoover is not. That is the reason that Capper himself, leaving the White House after a conference some time ago, complained that all Mr. Hoover would talk about was the indications of the market ticker tape.

And that is the reason Senator Moses, who called the Senatorial spokesmen of the West "sons of the wild jackass," is one of Mr. Hoover's outstanding champions.

During the greater part of their lives Mr. Roosevelt has lived at least three thousand miles closer to California than Mr. Hoover; and in sympathy a million miles would not be an exaggeration. That is the reason the West literally is stampeding to the Roosevelt camp.

As Plain as a Pike's Staff

But Mr. Hoover has his accessions, too—for Bishop Cannon has announced his adherence to the Hoover cause. He says he is for Hoover because Al Smith is for Roosevelt. It will be recalled that four years ago the Bishop was conspicuously identified with the kind of campaign that was waged against Smith.

But there is another reason for Bishop Cannon's preference—and that is Mr. Hoover's continuing devotion to "the noble experiment" of national prohibition. That issue is now as plain as a pike's staff.

It was made in the two conventions, when Mr. Hoover, with the aid of Ogden Mills in command of three hundred official retainers of the President, defeated an honest declaration for straight repeal and substituted one which would indefinitely continue the interference of the Federal Government in local matters. The Democrats overwhelmingly declared for straight repeal.

If there are subtle ties and legal technicalities here, making possible the confusion of the people, there is another divergence between Hoover and Roosevelt that makes the issue so clear that even the blind can see.

* * *

Mr. Hoover Will Not Stand for It

There is no possibility of repealing the 18th Amendment in any form for at least five years from now.

Mr. Hoover would continue the present scandalous conditions during these five years, and, in the meanwhile, give the people no relief at all.

But the Democrats in their platform pledged themselves to the immediate amendment of the Volstead Act after the people have entrusted them with power.

That is something for which Mr. Hoover will not stand.

It would mean something more—the lightening of the intolerable burden of destructive taxes to the tune of hundreds of millions of dollars by a tax on beer.

Is that what you want?

Then there can be no doubt as to where your vote should go.

* * *

The Issue Is Clear

Time and time again in his public speeches since the convention Mr. Roosevelt has declared without equivocation for the amendment of the Volstead Act to lighten the burden of taxation with a tax on beer.

Mr. Hoover has been just as unequivocally against the amendment of the Volstead Act; he has never intimated anything to the contrary; he won't, for he wants to hold on to the Bishop Cannons.

And his party candidates in New York are standing four-square with him for the Volstead Act, while Wagner and Lehman, the Roosevelt Senatorial and Gubernatorial nominees, with a frankness equal to Roosevelt's, are outspoken for the reopening of the breweries to put men to work and to lighten the burden of taxation.

Not long ago Attorney-General Mitchell announced that he would not have a District Attorney who did not believe in the 18th Amendment and the Volstead Act. He said every man suggested for that position would be questioned on that point; and Mr. Medalie, the Hoover candidate against Senator Wagner, was appointed. He is as silent as the Sphinx on the amendment of the Volstead Act.

So the issue is clear, and no liberal, nauseated with the orgy of corruption and hypocrisy which is costing hundreds of thousands jobs, and the taxpayers hundreds of millions of dollars, can ignore that issue.

We have said it before—to the anti-prohibitionists we say it again: The issue is clear—"put up or shut up!"

TODAY'S QUESTION

What is money?

YESTERDAY'S QUESTION

By MR. EDWIN A. HILL
Department of Mathematics

The sun has for some 8,000,000 years emitted prodigious quantities of radiation. Radiation is a form of energy. This laving expenditure of energy is attended by a decrease in mass; as mass can be and is converted into energy.

In 1924 Eddington showed that as a general thing the intensity of a star's radiation depended mainly upon its mass; the heaviest stars emitting the greatest quantity of radiation.

At one time the sun was about 100 times as heavy as it is now. The rate of its expenditure of energy was far higher. It rapidly lost weight. The loss was attended by a falling off in the rate of emission of energy.

Thus its loss of weight was also curbed. It is estimated that the sun now loses 250,000,000 tons of matter in a minute; about 360,000,000 tons in a day. Yet so prodigious is its mass that the rate at which it loses weight will not vary appreciably over centuries or even 1,000,000 years.

Scientists have tried to explain the source of solar energy. Some suggested a continuous supply of meteorites; others agreed with Helmholtz, who said that energy was set free by the sun's shrinkage or contraction.

Today it is thought that solar energy originates in the actual annihilation of matter; atoms disentegrating and releasing quanta of energy that ultimately appear as radiation. This is the only explanation that seems to be reasonable. It accounts for the long life of stars, one of which is our own sun.
